EUROPEAN NEWS.

Successful Advance of the Assemblists Before Paris.

The Government Troops Reported in Possession of St. Denis.

A Delusive Cessation of the Cannonading.

THE TOWN OF NEUILLY ON FIRE

Probability of a Decisive Battle Within Forty-Eight Hours.

Earnest Preparations by the Commune to Defend the City.

Paris Almost Completely Cut Off From the Provinces.

THE STRUGGLE FOR PARIS.

The Versailles Army Steadily Advancing—More Conciliatory Efforts—The Federalists Erecting Defensive Works at Neuilly.

BRUSSELS, April 22.—It is reported that a portion of the Army of Versailles has occupied St. Denis, and that communication with Paris by the Northern Railway is interrupted.

LONDON, April 23—11 P. M.—A dispatch from Paris says that representatives of the commerce and industry of the capital are about to make a fresh attempt at conciliation, and will go to Versailles for that purpose. The Army of the Assembly are strongly fortifying the towns of Sevres, Courbevoie and Asnieres, and the Federalists (Communists) are erecting defensive works at Neuilly, Levallois and Villiers. Mot d'Ordre confirms the entry of the Versailles troops into St. Denis. There has been no cannonading since 10 o'clock this morning.

PARISIAN REPORTS.

Another Victory Claimed by the Communist General—Demonstration by English Democrats—New Conscriptions—Defensive Preparations.

LONDON, April 22—4 P. M.—In a report made to the Commune yesterday, Gen. CLUSERET claims to have repulsed the Versailles Army at all points. Other accounts declare that the fighting was murderous, and say that the village of Courcelles, on the right bank of the Seine, between Neuilly and Clichy, is filled with wounded. It is stated that an armistice has been concluded for today for the burial of the dead, and to allow the inhabitants of Neuilly and Clichy, and other towns under bombardment, to remove to places of safety. A barricade is in course of erection under the Arch of Triumph.

A demonstration has been made by the English Democrats in Paris, at which resolutions were adopted congratulating the Commune upon its success. The Daily News' special dispatch from Paris says there are serious dissensions among the members of the Commune. Communication with the provinces is cut off. All citizens under fifty-five years of age are obliged to serve. A special dispatch to the Times from Paris says the Commune has delegated its powers to a committee of nine of its members. A company of aeronauts is being formed in Paris.

PARIS, April 21—Evening.—Cannonading is incessant between Clichy and Neuilly, but the expected general attack by the Versailles forces has not yet commenced.

The Commune is making immense and most minute preparations for defense, raising embankments and fortifications inside and outside of the ramparts, and hastening the manufacture of ammunition.

REPORTS FROM VERSAILLES.

A Decisive Battle Imminent—Rumors of a Mutiny in the Communist Army—The Town of Neuilly On Fire—Advanced Positions of the Versailles Army.

VERSAILLES, April 22—A. M.—The news is unimportant. A slight cannonade is now in progress at the advanced posts. A decisive battle is imminent. There is no truth in the rumors of Ministerial modifications and supplementary elections to the Assembly. President THIERS has visited the wounded Government soldiers. A mutiny is reported to have occurred among the Communist troops. The town of Neuilly has been set on fire by shells, and is now burning. Paris will shortly be completely isolated. The shell from the insurgent batteries fall short of Mont Valerien.

VERSAILLES, April 21—Evening.—The Versailles Army now holds all the offensive positions from Chatillon, south of Paris, to Gennevilliers, north of the capital, and but a short distance from St. Denis. The Assembly has passed a law providing for the payment of rents.

LONDON, April 22.—The official journal of Versailles, today, publishes a large number of appointments to the Legion of Honor, in order to equalize the rewards granted to the Army of the Rhine with those of Paris, the Loire and the North. Gens. CHANGARNIER, BOURBAKI, CISSET and BISSON are awarded Grand Crosses of the Order. The Telegraph's special dispatch from Versailles says the Prussians are preparing to evacuate Charenton. Gen. DUCROT has arrived at Versailles with 20,000 men of the late Imperial Army. The Times' correspondent at Versailles says it is reported that the Prussians will surrender the forts still held by them to the Versailles troops on Sunday.

GENERAL EUROPEAN NEWS.

The Church and State in the Austrian Parliament—Arrival of the Princess Louise at Florence.

LONDON, April 22.—It is announced that MENOTTI GARIBALDI will at once return to Italy.

FLORENCE, April 22.—The Princess LOUISE and Marquis of LORNE have arrived in Florence from London, and will make a short visit.

VIENNA, April 21.—The Austrian Reichsrath has, by the adoption of a resolution, demanded of the Government the introduction of the promised bill in relation to Church and State.

AFFAIRS IN ENGLAND.

The Labors of Parliament—The Army Bill and its Significance—The Public House Question—Local Government and its Chaos—Land-Owners in Peril—Mr. Mill and Land Tenure Reform.

From Our Own Correspondent.

LONDON, Saturday, April 8, 1871.

The first part of the Parliamentary session is over, and our weary legislators and ministers are resting on their oars for a brief breathing space. Of actual legislation accomplished during the two last months, there is little or nothing to take stock of, but the general drift of the measures proposed should be noted as highly significant of the future politics of this country. The Army bill and the Ballot bill have both been read a second time, and I should imagine the latter, at least, is safe enough to pass this session, simply because it is a conventional feature in the Liberal programme, which Liberals feel bound to insist on without really caring anything about it, because the Conservatives are not quite sure whether it would not tell in some respects for them quite as much as in other respects it will tell against them, and because if the House of Commons pass the measure, the Lords may share, but will not dare to reject it.

THE ARMY BILL.

As for the Army bill, I hardly know what to think. If it passes, it will be an enormous step forward in the great democratic revolution. No reasonable person, I should imagine, can doubt that sooner or later it must be carried; but that it should be carried at a single stroke; that this stout fortress of class ascendency should fall, as it were, at the first blast of the assailants' trumpet, is what I am hardly ready to believe. Sanguine Liberals are celebrating a certain victory, while dejected Conservatives are bemoaning an anticipated defeat. Yet I doubt. The bill has been read a second time without a division, and Col. LOYD LINDSAY'S amendment was a conspicuous failure. That an amendment thus supported by all the military strength of the House should have broken down so abjectly and utterly that the mover himself begged hard to be allowed to withdraw it, and was only prevented by Mr. GLADSTONE'S haughty determination to show how well he could carry his party with him, seems a strong proof of the helplessness of any effort to preserve the franchise system. Moreover, the whole debate justified the assertion of the Government that it is really impossible to do anything toward improving the officers of the army without getting rid of the vested interests which interfere with the smallest change. Yet for all that, as I said before, I doubt. I know the tenacity with which Englishmen hug to old customs. I know the deep roots which this particular practice has struck through all the higher ranks of the English social system, through plutocracy, as well as our aristocracy; and knowing this, I don't feel at all sure that the Government bill will not perhaps founder even now on one or other of the numerous amendments of which notice has been given. All I can say is, that if purchase really does go by the Board this time, it will be a remarkable illustration of the honeycombed condition of Conservative resistance, and the insidious and overpowering progress of Democratic influences.

PUBLIC HOUSE REFORM.

Two of the other big bills of the Government were introduced this week, but have no chance of being carried this session. Indeed, I fancy the Ministers themselves regard them rather as kites than real bills. They are meant to be flown, just to see how the wind blows. One of these measures deals with the great Public House question. There can be no doubt that, whatever our other virtues, we are a scandalously drunken people. The amount of misery, disorder and crime produced among the lower classes, and even some portions of the middle and upper classes, by over-indulgence, is appalling to contemplate, when one puts together the observations of a year, or even of a few weeks. The middle and upper classes, however, don't liquor up at the public bars, and the question of public houses is, therefore, one relating to the laboring orders, though affecting the rest of the community terribly in an indirect manner. There are two theories on the subject; one is that there are too many public houses; the other (to which I incline) that there are too few, or, at least, that it is monopoly which is at the bottom of the mischief. The drinking trade is practically in the hands of a number of great brewers, who buy up the licensed public houses, put their own nominees into them, charging an exorbitant premium for the lease, and supplying indifferent beer at an equally exorbitant price. The publican thus situated has to adulterate the liquor to make it pay, and as long as he settles punctually with the brewer, he can do what he likes. The brewers have naturally considerable influence with the justices who grant the licenses, and thus the monopoly is kept up, their men getting licenses, and independent men being shut out. Other influences also come into play. Some boards of justices are violently political, and licenses are granted or refused according to the votes which applicants gave at the last election. The consequence is that respectable people are kept out of the trade, and publicans are apt, as a rule, to be necessitous, desperate men, not overburdened with scruples, and almost driven to roguery in order to get a living and pay the extortionate demands of their grinding patrons, the brewers. For this state of things the true remedy is free trade, with a sharp system of regulation and inspection. The Government promises us the latter, but instead of the former we are to have a system of licensing by the justices, qualified by certain rules not yet published, as to the proportion of houses allowed to a given population, and by an appeal to a plebiscite of the inhabitants of the district. A novel feature is that when the number of houses in a district has been fixed, the licenses will be put up to auction and assigned to the highest bidders or bidder, for they may be bought in a lump. The expense of inspection, &c., will be paid out of the proceeds of these sales. This system is too complicated and artificial, I think, to work well, if even it can be worked at all.

CENTRALIZING THE LOCAL BOARDS.

The other new bill of the Government (designed by Mr. GOSCHEN) is an attempt to reduce to order the chaos of local government. You know, I dare say, how we pride ourselves on our local government. Centralization is the great English bogey. Local self-government is the neat and compact formula into which we compress the whole explanation of our constitutional vigor and imperial greatness. We thank Heaven we are not centralized like that wretched country, France. Happy, happy England, with her parish pump and vestry beadle as permanent "guarantees of national vitality!" Of course, there is a good deal of truth in this view. Parish politics, in the best sense of the term, means local energy and an all-pervading public spirit. It means that you can cut a community into pieces, and each piece remains a vital organism, quite capable of taking care of itself. The Anglo-Saxon race on both sides of the Atlantic are what they are mainly through their firm hold on this great principle, which has become indeed a kind of second nature to them. But local self-government has another side, with which you are as well acquainted as we are. It is not always the cleanest thing in the world. The icicle "that's curded by the frost and hangs on Diau's temple" is not exactly an emblem of local administrative chastity. Local self-government with us has become a synonym for lobbery and mismanagement, at least in the towns. The better sort of public-spirited men aim at the House of Commons, and despise anything beneath it, except as a stepping-stone to get there. The consequence is, that the various local boards are filled by men who are obscure even among the obscure, and whose obscurity is the screen behind which they perpetrate their jobs and exhibit their incapacity with the utmost impunity. They are men without name or position, and there is no getting at them. Never having had a character, they have none to lose, and neither the sharp criticisms of the Press nor the more direct censures of the central authority touch them at all. In country districts affairs are much better managed. The landlords practically have everything in their own hands, and their integrity is beyond reproach, while they are also tolerably successful in providing what is wanted. It is proposed that there shall be representative county Boards elected (but at second-hand, not first-hand,) by the rate-payers, as well as representative parochial and borough Boards. In other respects the object of the scheme is to simplify and concentrate local government, by reconciling conflicts of jurisdiction, and securing uniformity in the collection and audit of accounts. At present we have, as Mr. GOSCHEN said, "a chaos as regards authorities, a chaos as regards rates, and a worse chaos than all as regards areas." There can be no doubt of the need of reform, or of the direction taken by the Government being the right one. Where they fail is in not going far enough.

THE LAND-OWNERS IN PERIL.

A shudder went through the House of Commons a week or two since when the Lord Advocate (the chief Scotch Minister in the Government) remarked, incidentally, that rent was "only a personal debt." I wonder how the country gentlemen will feel when they read the programme of the new Land Tenure Reform Association, which has just been published, with an "explanatory statement" by Mr. JOHN STUART MILL, who is the Chairman of the Society.

I should fancy that when the gentlemen with the broad lands, "cored up to the lips," as DISRAELI used to say, perceive these heretical and blasphemous proposals, their hair will stand on end and they will think the world drawing to a close. The days of feudal privilege are already numbered, and the agitation to make land a simple article of commerce, taxed just the same as other property, and deprived of all peculiar privileges, is destined to work far deeper and more momentous results than all the party reforms that could be.

F. J. H.

RULLOFF, THE MURDERER.

Prof. Mather's Account of His Interview With Him—His Zeal as a Philologist.

Prof. R. H. MATHER, of Amherst College, has communicated to the Springfield (Mass.) Republican an account of a visit he recently made to the murderer, EDWARD H. RULLOFF, in his cell. From it we quote the following, which will doubtless be interesting, even to those who have already read much respecting this singular man:

The visit was not one of idle curiosity, for one of my colleagues in the college had shown me, some months since, a criticism of RULLOFF'S, written years ago, when he was in the State Prison at Auburn, N. Y., upon parts of Prof. TAYLER LEWIS' edition of one of PLATO'S dialogues, which had warmly interested me in his scholarship. About 9 o'clock, the advocate and I went down to the prison, and the gentlemanly High Sheriff at once consented to grant the interview, if RULLOFF was willing. The doomed man at first refused, as he had done of late to all visitors, but when told that I was a student and teacher of Greek, he at once consented. He approached the heavy latticed iron door and asked very politely if I could remain long enough to learn something of the beauties of his theory of language. Without replying, I turned to the officer and asked if I might be permitted to go into the cell. He said, yes, and proceeded to unlock the massive padlocks. It was a long, narrow, granite-built room, but high, and furnished with plenty of light and pure air. As we entered RULLOFF approached with two dilapidated chairs, and with the most winning courtesy, asked us to be seated, and offered to relieve me of my hat. He sat down on his rude pallet opposite me, and I told him that I had seen the criticism referred to above, and that I had desired to learn how he had acquired his knowledge of the old languages. He replied, with a smile, that he had obtained it all by honest work; that he had never been in a college or university, but that from boyhood he had had a most intense interest in the beauty and the strength of the Greek tongue. He complained that he had been laughed at by the public as a superficial scholar, and wanted me to satisfy myself on that, and then hear what he had to say about the formation of language. I replied that as we had no text books, I could not examine him, to which he rejoined that many of the classical authors he knew by heart, and would try and repeat portions if I would suggest where he should begin. Thinking that something from the Memorabilia might be appropriate to his present needs, I suggested the third chapter, first book, where the sentiments of SOCRATES with reference to God and duty in their purity and exaltation approach so nearly to Biblical revelation; and he at once gave me the Greek. Other parts of the same work, as well as the Iliad of HOMER and some of the plays of SOPHOCLES, he showed great familiarity with. Then, in order to show his thoroughness, he criticised the common rendering of certain passages, and he did it with such subtlety and discrimination and elegance as to show that his critical study of these nicer points was more remarkable than his powers of memory; in fact I should say that subtlety of analysis and reasoning was the marked characteristic of his mind. On one or two passages of HOMER, in particular, he showed great acuteness of criticism, and a most thorough appreciation of the grandeur of the sentiment. One or two renderings of President FELTON he opposed most vigorously, and when I supported the common version he quoted from a vast range of classics to confirm his view.

His theory of language I cannot enter upon here, for it is too subtle for the general reader. It is very original, is quite contrary to the established views upon comparative philology, and probably will never be of any practical use. Most persons think him a monomaniac on this, and certainly his enthusiasm is most remarkable. He sat there in his chains, just sentenced by the highest Court to die on the gallows, and without a word, or apparently a thought, about his doom, he argued and plead for his favorite theory, as though he were wrestling for his life and was determined to win. He is anxious to have philologists examine the manuscript of his work. He urged me to come with several such men, and take time to see whether his theory is true. He asked my pardon for the apparent dogmatism of the statement, but said he felt convinced that this theory of language was a special revelation to him, and that perhaps a hundred years might elapse ere it would be known. He said then added, significantly, "And you know that whatever is done must be done quickly."

In person this strange man is about middle height and of robust build, and is apparently verging on fifty years of age, not at all the broken old man he has been represented. He has a singular face, not villainous or grossly sensual, nor is it scholarly. The features are strongly marked and full of sinister meaning. It is a face you could not forget, and yet would not care to think about. His eye, which is dark hazel, I had heard was the striking feature, but it did not impress me so, perhaps because it showed struggle and suffering. The bad lines in his face to me were about his chin and forehead, and his neck is very short and stout and heavy. In manners he is very urbane and natural, and he converses with great facility and elegance. His voice is mellow and pleasant, and occasionally showed tones of tenderness. But for all that I do not believe the man has any tenderness save for language. In looking at him you would never imagine him as loving any human being, and you would be sure that his hatred would be implacable. He is certainly an enigma, and offers in himself a powerful argument against the theory that education is alone sufficient to lead to true manhood. Those who would throw out mofal and Biblical teachings from our systems of culture, have a difficult task to harmonize their theory with such a character as this. He is a profound and appreciative student of all that is beautiful and glorious in classical learning, working for years as a philologist, and with a zeal rarely equaled; and yet all the time living a life of crime as dark and terrible as any criminal in our land. He shows that true culture and true manhood can only be by a development of the moral sense, and that we must educate the heart as fast as we educate the head, or our knowledge may only increase our sin.

A Man Drowned.

WM. WRIGHT, one of the crew of the British ship Ada, while intoxicated, fell overboard at Pier No. 37 East River, last night, and was drowned. His body was not recovered.

WASHINGTON.

The Currency Statement—Registered Bonds Interest—A Lunatic Claiming the Presidency—Earl Grey's Reception—A Fatal Accident—Miscellaneous Matters.

WASHINGTON, April 22.—The receipts of fractional currency for the week ending today amount to $742,000.

THE INTEREST ON REGISTERED BONDS.

The Secretary of the Treasury has determined to adopt an approved plan for the payment of interest on the new registered bonds, which will save much trouble and inconvenience to holders as well as materially improve the prospects of the new funded loan to which class of the debt the new plan will be confined. The plan above referred to consists in the payment of interest by a check payable to the order of the Treasurer of the United States sent directly by mail to the address of the holder of the bond, and removes the serious inconvenience of compelling holders to attend the office of the Assistant Treasurer in order to obtain their money. The Secretary has given directions that a circular shall be issued inviting all parties subscribing for the new loan to furnish their addresses in order to enable this plan to be carried out.

A SINGULAR HALLUCINATION.

This morning a man named PATRICK MCGINNIS, who says he is from Pawtucket, R. I., appeared at the office of the Chief of Police, and applied for a force of Police strong enough to place him in the White House, which he claims as his office, he having been elected President of the United States by the people, and that it is all a humbug about Grant's election. He had previously applied to a lawyer near the Police Head-quarters to prosecute his claim for the office of President befor the Supreme Court of the United States. He says he has made a formal demand upon the President to vacate his seat. Transportation was obtained for him to Philadelphia, on his way home to Rhode Island.

THE ODD FELLOWS.

The fifty-second anniversary of the establishment of the Order of Odd Fellows in this country will be observed by the members here, on Wednesday next, as a day of thanksgiving, and extensive preparations have been made for it. There will be a procession, and orations will be delivered at the National Theatre.

THE HIGH COMMISSION.

The English High Commission are anxiously awaiting advices from their Government concerning the propositions submitted for its sanction.

A FATAL ACCIDENT.

This afternoon an accident occurred on Seventh-street and Virginia-avenue, resulting in the instant death of one man and the fatal injury to another. The Baltimore and Potomac Railroad force are tunneling at this point, and had reached nearly the centre of Seventh-street, when suddenly a large quantity of earth fell—the bank being about thirty feet high—upon three of the colored laborers, JOHN BOONE, JOHNSON IRWIN and JAMES YOUNG. The digging-out process was commenced at once, when it was discovered that BOONE had been killed outright, and IRWIN severely injured. YOUNG was unhurt, although he was completely buried for at least two hours. BOONE was formerly a slave of PHILIP HILLS, Prince George County. Mr. IRWIN was conveyed to the Providence Hospital, with one leg and one arm broken, and suffering from internal injuries.

RECEPTION BY EARL GREY.

Earl GREY was at home to-night at the quarters of the English High Commission. It was one of the largest receptions that ever took place in Washington. There were present, among others, all the members of the Joint High Commission, Judges of the Supreme Court, members of the Cabinet, foreign Ministers, Senators, and Representatives in Congress, eminent officers of the army and navy, and many prominent citizens, accompanied by ladies. Sir EDWARD and Lady THORNTON, assisted Earl DE GREY in receiving the guests. The yard attached to the house was for this occasion converted into a conservatory; choice plants being tastefully arranged, and the walls hung with evergreens and intertwined with American and British flags. The band played alternately the national airs of both countries. There was much freedom and sociability among the guests, and the hospitalities were richly dispensed.

THE WEATHER.

Synopsis of Report for the Last Twenty-four Hours.

WAR DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE CHIEF SIGNAL OFFICER, WASHINGTON, D. C., April 22—7½ P. M.—The barometer continues falling steadily on the California coast. It has also fallen decidedly at Rocky Mountain stations and in the Northern States with a rapid increase of temperature. The high pressure which advanced Friday night into the Mississippi Valley continues in the south-east, and extends to Ohio. The light rain and clouds of Friday night have slowly passed from Lakes Michigan and Huron to the Eastern States. Clearing-up weather is now reported on Lake Erie. Fair and clear weather has been generally experienced during the day from Virginia, south and westward.

PROBABILITIES.

It is probable that the barometer will continue to fall on the Pacific coast, and may possibly bring rain on Sunday. A falling barometer, with cloudy weather and fresh winds, is probable for the upper lakes on Sunday; partially cloudy weather for the Eastern States, and clear weather south of Pennsylvania and the Ohio River.

The Weather on Mount Washington.

MOUNT WASHINGTON, N. H., April 22.—Observations at 7 o'clock P. M.—Barometer, 29.81; change, minus 07. Thermometer, 24°; change, minus 7°. Relative humidity, 86; wind west; velocity of wind, twenty-five miles per hour. At sunset the country northward was covered with clouds, and there were also a few clouds in the valley near the mountain. These soon began to come over the summit. It has been snowing at intervals since 9 o'clock A. M.

EXPLOSION AT HOOSAC TUNNEL.

Four Men Instantly Killed—Lightning Alleged as the Cause of the Disaster.

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., April 22.—There has been another terrible explosion at the Hoosac Tunnel, being attended this time by a sad loss of life, no less than four men being instantly killed, and one other seriously injured. The explosion took place at the east end of the Hoosac Tunnel, yesterday afternoon, about 4¼ o'clock, instantly killing Mr. JOHN S. MASON, Superintendent; FRED. ROBERTS, blaster; THOS. RATCRAFT, machine runner, and W. DUNN, miner. Mr. JOHN CHURCHILL, carpenter, was severely injured, having his leg broken. The charges were all ready for explosion, the machine run back out of the way, wire connected, &c., and the men were standing under the holes which were in the roof, when the electricity from the thunder-shower, which was in progress at the time, exploded the charges with the result stated. Another account states that the usual blast was about to take place in the enlargement of the tunnel—the men having the roof-holes. The blasters had made all necessary arrangements for connecting the main wire to the battery, but were waiting for the other men to pass by. At that moment the holes were fired by a current of electricity, conducted from the mouth of the tunnel, a distance of one-quarter of a mile, by an iron rail. It is believed that during the thunder showers that took place at that time, the lightning struck the track, causing the electric wire to explode the holes.

CUBA.

Gen. Valmaseda to take the Field in Cuba—More Murders by the Troops.

HAVANA, April 22.—The Diario says that VALMASEDA will go to Camaguey with five or six battalions, after pacifying Sancti Spiritus.

A telegram received from VALMASEDA, dated at Sancti Spiritus, yesterday, says the column of troops under CASTILLA killed MIGUEL GEROMINO GUTIERIEZ, Vice-President of the Cuban House of Representatives, and MIGUEL VELASCO, a quartermaster, driving the majority of the insurgent bands across the military line of the Moron. At Santiago de Cuba, on the 22d, Col. CANIZAL surprised the rebel encampment near Cobre, killing twenty and taking some prisoners, five of whom were immediately executed.

Official advices confirm the report that the insurgents remain on the eastern side of the military line.

FIRES.

Destructive Fires in West Virginia and Missouri.

WHEELING, West Va., April 22.—At 2 o'clock this morning a fire broke out in a carpenter-shop in Farmington, about sixty-five miles from Wheeling, on the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, which destroyed fifteen dwellings, the station-house, pump-house, warehouse and merchandise worth $5,000, the ticket and express offices and their contents. The fire was caused by some drunken men playing cards in the carpenter-shop, and dropping a candle among the shavings. About half of the town is destroyed.

ST. LOUIS, Mo., April 22.—A fire at Sedalia, Mo., last Saturday, destroyed property belonging to J. S. STALEY & Co. and others, valued from $60,000 to $70,000, insured as follows: North American, $3,000; Security, $3,000; Lorillard, $2,000; Imperial, of London, $10,000; Germania, of New-York, $5,000; Home, of New-York, $5,000; Liverpool and London Globe, $5,000; Pacific, of California, $5,000; Phenix, of Brooklyn, $5,000; other insurance companies, $8,500.

THE EAST.

The French Fair in Boston—Probable Disaster on the Fishing Banks.

BOSTON, April 22.—The French Fair, which closed to-night, has been quite successful, though possibly the complications in France since the project was inaugurated have affected the result disadvantageously. The receipts are announced at about $80,000, and probably the net proceeds to be devoted to the aid of the French will amount to $60,000 or $70,000. Four fishing schooners, belonging to Gloucester, Mass., were probably lost, with all hands, in the severe gale of the 2d inst., on the Banks. The missing vessels are the A. F. Landberg, with eleven men; the Seaman's Pride, with ten men; the William Murray, with nine men, and the B. H. Hough, with ten men. Gloucester is in mourning over the probable fate of the missing schooners. Two fishing vessels from the same place were lost in February, which, added to the presumed disasters of April, give a total of six vessels and sixty-three lives lost the present season. The lost seamen were mostly residents of Gloucester, and many of them have left families.

THE WEST.

Progress of the Northern Pacific Railroad—President Grant in Indiana.

ST. PAUL, Minn., April 22.—The track is now being laid on the Northern Pacific Railroad at the rate of one mile per day, and over 3,000 men are employed on the construction of the work. Cars are running two miles beyond Brainerd.

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind., April 22.—President GRANT arrived in this city this morning, accompanied by Senator MORTON, and was met by the Committee of Reception, consisting of Hon. DANIEL MACAULEY, Mayor, and a number of prominent citizens. The President remains here as a guest of Senator MORTON until 10½ o'clock to-night, when he will leave for St. Louis by a special train over the Vandalia route. A public reception will be given him at the Academy of Music this evening. Addresses will be made by Senator MORTON, Gov. BAKER, Hon. JOHN COBURN and others.

The Dakota Legislature—A Telegraphic Mistake.

YANKTON, Dakota Territory, April 21.—The special session of the Legislature which was convened on Tuesday was brought to a sudden termination just as the most important business had been finished. A dispatch was received by Gov. BURBANK on that day from Secretary FISH, which read as follows: "The Attorney-General is of opinion that a special session is authorized." By another dispatch received today it is ascertained that the first dispatch should read unauthorized. The error is traceable to some telegraph office between Sioux City and Chicago. Before the last dispatch came to hand a bill had passed both Houses and been signed by the Governor authorizing the counties and townships to vote a tax in aid of railroads. As the session was held in good faith, under the supposed favorable opinion of the Attorney-General, it is presumed that Congress, when appealed to, will legalize the action of the Legislature.

UTAH TERRITORY.

Movements of Brigham Young—The United States District Court.

GREAT SALT LAKE, Utah, April 22.—BRIGHAM YOUNG left here today for the South. The body of a man supposed to have been murdered, was found two miles west of this city on Thursday. Chief-Justice JAMES B. MCKEAN will hold the next term of the United States District Court at Salt Lake City on May 15, at which time it is expected arrangements will have been perfected to enable him to have Grand and Petit Jurors. Some cases of great importance will come on for investigation or trial. It is expected to be an exceedingly interesting term.

THE PACIFIC COAST.

Indian Outrages in Arizona—Movements of Gov. Safford.

SAN FRANCISCO, April 21.—Gov. SAFFORD, of Arizona, has gone East to attend the organization of the Southern Pacific Railroad, of which he is a corporator. A stage was attacked by Apache Indians on the 16th inst., sixty-five miles east of Tucson, Arizona, and the driver, MARK ROBBINS, killed and horribly mutilated. The stage was burned and the mail destroyed.

Opening of the Base-Ball Season in Washington.

WASHINGTON, April 22.—The first regular base-ball match game of the season came off today between the Olympics and Nationals of this city. A north-east wind prevailed during the game, which was the cause of some loose play on both sides. The Olympics won easily by the following score:

	1st.	2d.	3d.	4th.	5th.	6th.	7th.	8th.	9th.
Nationals	2	0	3	2	0	4	0	1	0	12
Olympics	3	5	2	8	1	0	5	3	9	36

Runs earned, 16 to 3.

The Memphis Spring Meeting—Opening of the Little Rock Railroad.

MEMPHIS, April 22.—Fifty-two well-known horses are already on the course, and more are expected for the Spring meeting, which commences Tuesday next. A special dispatch to the Avalanche from Little Rock says: "The first engine went over the Memphis and Little Rock Railroad yesterday. There is not more than six inches of water over the track at any place."

THE NEW COMET.

The Phenomenon Observed at Three Points.

ALBANY, New-York, April 22.—Prof. HOUGH, of the Dudley Observatory, announces the discovery of a new comet. It was first seen by LEWIS SWIFT, of Marathon, N. Y., on the evening of the 15th inst., and reported to Prof. HOUGH, who, owing to cloudy weather, was unable to observe it until the 18th. Last night its approximate position was 3 hours 30 minutes right ascension, and 46° 6 minutes north declination. The right ascension is increasing 3 minutes 20 seconds, and the declination is diminishing 30 minutes daily.

WASHINGTON, April 22.—The following letter was received at the Navy Department yesterday:

UNITED STATES NAVAL OBSERVATORY, WASHINGTON, April 21, 1871.

SIR: I have the honor to inform the Department that I received a letter on the 19th of April from Mr. LEWIS SWIFT, of Marathon, N. Y., announcing that he had discovered a comet on the 15th inst. The comet was observed here last night by Prof. HALL, and its position was as follows: April 20, 9 hours 2 minutes Washington time; right ascension, 3 hours, 26 minutes 4 seconds; declination north, 46° 54'; hourly motion in right ascension increasing 8s.; hourly motion in declination diminishing 1'.3. The comet is a telescopic one of average brightness.

Very respectfully, &c.

B. F. SANDS, Commodore, Superintendent.

Hon. GEORGE M. ROBESON, Secretary of the Navy.

A Subsidy for the Louisville and Nashville Railroad.

LOUISVILLE, Ky., April 22.—The Board of Aldermen, to-night, unanimously passed an ordinance subscribing $375,000 to aid the Louisville and Nashville Railroad Company in extending its connection south, by a lease of the Louisville and Decatur Railroad, and to purchase an interest in the North and South Alabama Railroad. The ordinance will be submitted to the people on the 9th of May instead of the 6th. The stockholders of the Central Savings Bank, lately closed on account of the irregularities of the cashier, C. G. ROGERS, held a meeting today. The statement of the condition of the Bank is as follows: Liabilities, $124,355; assets, bills receivable and bills of exchange, at fifty per cent. on their face, $135,908 70; the bank has $89,000 in good paper, and $60,000 in foreign banks. On this statement the stockholders determined to resume business, and selected a new Board for the purpose, CLARK SMITH, of the firm of J. L. LITTLEJOHN & Co., President. The bank will be ready for work on Tuesday, when it will be prepared to pay every dollar deposited.

Precarious Condition of State Senator Harpending.

ALBANY, April 22.—Senator HARPENDING has suffered a relapse, and is in a low condition this evening.

OBITUARY.

Mr. Dan Symonds.

We record, with extreme regret, the death of Mr. DANIEL SYMONDS. Mr. SYMONDS had long been in ill health, but his decease was rather unlooked for by his numerous friends in theatrical circles here. It occurred, we learn, yesterday at Hoboken, in New-Jersey, whither Mr. SYMONDS had returned after a sojourn in Louisiana with Mr. JOSEPH JEFFERSON. The deceased gentleman was a manager in Australia, and he revisited this country with Mr. JEFFERSON in 1865, and accompanied that artist to England in 1867. In January, 1869, he became business manager of the Olympic Theatre, and only relinquished the duties of that office when compelled to do so by infirmities. Mr. SYMONDS was English by birth, but his first visit to this country was made twenty-five years ago, and he was absent from it only during his stay in Australia and during brief trips to Europe. Besides possessing a thorough knowledge of all details pertaining to theatrical affairs, he was a capital actor, and excelled in "dialect parts." Of numerous performances in which he shared, that in which he represented Dr. Caius, during Mr. HACKETT'S last engagement at the Broadway Theatre, and the latest, on the occasion of an entertainment by which he benefited at the Olympic, in June last, are freshest in our recollection. Free-and-easy, and probably more widespread, are memories of kindliness and humor, whereof sufficient proofs have been given to cause a general and deep sorrow to tread upon the tidings of his loss.

Mr. W. H. Sedley Smith.

From the Philadelphia Evening Telegraph, April 22.

Mr. W. H. SEDLEY SMITH, a well-known actor, and one of the best "old men" upon the stage, died yesterday at St. Louis. His real name was W. H. SEDLEY, and he was born in Montgomeryshire, North Wales, Dec. 4, 1806. He was obliged to commence fighting his way in the world at an early age, and as his taste inclined him to the stage, he assumed the name of SMITH, and obtained a situation at the Shrewsbury Theatre, under the management of Mr. CRISP. In a short time he was assigned to play minor parts, and improving the opportunities afforded him, he made a rapid advance. In 1822 he obtained his first regular engagement at the Theatre Royal, Lancaster, where he played walking gentlemen's parts. In 1827 he received an offer of an engagement from this side of the Atlantic, and in June, 1827, he made his first appearance in America at the Walnut-street Theatre, in this city, as Diddler in "Raising the Wind," and as Lothair in "The Miller and His Men." In 1828 he accepted an engagement at the Tremont Theatre, Boston, and since then he has played in many of the best theatres of the country. A few years ago Mr. SMITH was attached to the Chesnut-street company, in this city, when it was under Mr. SINN'S management. He will be remembered by many of our playgoers on account of his artistic acting in many standard "old man" parts.

How a Thunder-Storm Affected the Wild Animals—An Elephant in Tears.

From the Springfield (Ill.) Journal, April 20.

We learn that at about 4 o'clock yesterday morning, during the heavy rain-storm, accompanied by high wind, some three or four cars standing upon a side track at Lanesville, a station just east of Mechanicsburg, on the line of the Toledo, Wabash and Western Railroad, were blown upon the main track and there stopped. Soon after, No. 5 freight train, bound West, came along; but such was the darkness that prevailed at the time that the obstruction was not seen in season to stop, and the train ran into the cars, smashing several of them up rather badly. The locomotive was also somewhat damaged; but fortunately no one was injured, although several men were in the caboose at the time. We understand that the engineer saw the cars, but the blinding effects of the flashes of lightning, and the darkness, gave the appearance of their being on the side track; the mistake was not discovered in time to prevent the collision. Upon the freight-train were four lions and an elephant, en route for Quincy, to join a menagerie or circus company to be organized in that place. The commotion among the lions at the time of the collision is said to have been terrific as they roared and dashed against the bars of their cages. The elephant was thrown down, and appeared the picture of fear, his huge frame trembling like a leaf in a storm, and the "big tears falling thick and fast from his eyes;" so says an eye-witness. The nature and extent of the accident was soon ascertained, the lions quieted, the Italian having charge of the elephant soon restored the confidence of the animal, and matters assumed a business-like appearance. The damaged cars were taken from the track, but not, however, in season to avoid some detention of the passenger-train, which came in rather late. We understand that no blame is attached to the engineer of the freight-train.

Felonious Assaults Last Night.

PATRICK HUGHES, a young man, assaulted his father, JOHN HUGHES, at his residence, No. 208 Seventh-street, last evening, and cut him severely about the head and face. The unnatural son was locked up at the Union Market Police Station.

At a late hour last night a fight occurred in Washington Market, between JOHN POWERS, of Jersey City, and MICHAEL KELLY, of No. 255 Fulton-street, during which KELLY used a chopper and POWERS a knife. Both were slightly injured, and locked up at the Chambers-street Police Station.

COAL MATTERS.

Favorable Outlook on the Entire Question.

Partial Resumption of Operations Near Scranton.

Four Mines at Work and Others Preparing to Follow.

The Working Miners Guaranteed Full Protection.

Probability of a Satisfactory Settlement Next Week.

Important Action Taken by the Schuylkill Operators.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

SCRANTON, Penn., April 22.—Four mines are working today. The German miners employed by the Lackawanna Iron and Coal Company, who, by threats and intimidation, were compelled to cease work yesterday, resumed operations today, the Company guaranteeing protection. About fifty cars were mined during the day. The mine of MORRIS & WERRS is running, and HALL & FELLOWS are also working a full force of men in their mine. A private mine at Petersburg commenced operations today. The public generally seem to be strongly of the opinion that the meeting to be held at Hyde Park, on Tuesday, will bring about a satisfactory settlement, though, by those best informed, this is considered very doubtful. All the soldiers, but one company, left for their homes this noon.

A gentleman from Carbondale, with whom I conversed today, says that the miners of

KNOCKED ABOUT.

Why don't I work? Well, Sir, will you,
Right here on the spot, give me suthin' to do?
Work! Why, Sir, I don't want no more
'N a chance in any man's shop or store;
That's what I'm lookin' for every day,
But thar ain't no jobs; well, what d'ye say?
Hain't got nothin' at present! Just so;
That's how it always is, I know!

Fellows like me ain't wanted much;
Folks are gen'rally jubus of such;
Thinks they ain't the right sort o' stuff—
Blest if it isn't a kind o' rough
On a man to have folks hintin' belief
That he ain't to be trusted more'n a thief,
When p'raps his fingers are cleaner far
'N them o' the chaps that talk so are!

Got a look o' the sea? Well, I 'xpect that's so;
Had a hankerin' that way some years ago,
And run off; I shipped in a whaler fust,
And got cast away; but that warn't the wust;
Took fire, Sir, next time, we did, and—well,
We blazed up till every thing standin' fell,
And then me and Tom—my mate—and some more,
Got off, with a notion of goin' ashore.

But thar warn't no shore to see round thar,
So we drifted and drifted everywhar
For a week, and then all but Tom and me
Was food for the sharks or down in the sea.
But we prayed—me and Tom—the best we could,
For a sail. It come, and at last we stood
On old arth once more, and the Captain told
Us we was ashore in the land of gold.

Gold! We didn't get much. But we struck
For the mines, of course, and tried our luck.
'Twarn't bad at the start, but things went wrong
Pooty soon, for one night thar come along,
While we was asleep, some red-skin chaps,
And they made things lively round thar—perhaps!
Anyhow, we left mighty quick—Tom and me,
And we didn't go back—kind o' risky, yes see!

By'm-by, Sir, the war come on, and then
We 'listed. Poor Tom! I was nigh him when
It all happened. He looked up and sez, sez he,
"Bill, it's come to partin' 'twixt you and me,
Old chap. I hain't much to leave—here, this knife—
Stand to your colors, Bill, while you have life."
That was all.—Yes, got wounded myself, Sir, here,
And—I'm pensioned on water and air a year!
It ain't much to thank for that I'm alive,
Knockin' about like this—what, a five!
That's suthin' han'some, now, that is. I'm blest.
If things don't quite frequent turn out for the best
After all! A V! Hi! Luck! It's far more!
Mister, I kind o' liked the looks o' your store.
You're a trump, Sir, a reg—sh? O, all right!
I'm off, but you are, Sir, a trump, honor bright!

DANIEL CONNOLLY.

Appleton's Journal.

LOTTERY TICKET NO. 3,060.

We were a party of six—a West African Governor and his wife, a Commissary-General and his wife, a Chief-Justice, and your humble servant. A fever-stricken lot we were, and had just escaped with our lives from an epidemic, to recruit health and strength in the salubrious climate of Teneriffe—that beautiful island-province of Old Spain.

We had money to spend; as why should we not, coming from the Gold and Ivory Coast? and only required the health to enjoy it. We had great animal spirits, too, notwithstanding a manifest attenuation of our material persons, and were thoroughly determined, carpere diem, not a day should pass without its excitement—some excursion, or picnic, or supper party, or something.

We waited on the Governor-General, and were received with a flourish of trumpets, rather inconsistent with his Excellency's occupation, as we came upon him, coat off, lopping the dead leaves of his favorite tree-camellia. Then his Excellency and suite returned our call, when we happened to be out; which was better luck, I must say, than a repetition of the painful interview that had taken place in the saloon of Government House, where broken English and worse attempts at Spanish, had almost confounded and angered us into something desperate.

Still this was insufficient excitement for emancipated coast officials. We required a fresh stimulant—something novel and startling and extravagant.

"I have it!" said the Governor one morning, to our great relief, as we sat at breakfast, silent and moody, around the table d'hôte of the only English hotel in Santa Cruz, "just the very thing! What can be more wildly, intensely delightful than—than gambling?"

The ladies shuddered and looked dismayed.

"I don't mean that we should drop into the casino next door and stake our sovereigns on the monte-table; but why should we not go in for the lottery?"

"What lottery?" we all asked in a breath.

"Why, the Madrid great prize lottery; see, here is all about it."

And then he read aloud an English translation of a circular setting forth the advantages and inducements of a ticket in the great lottery of the year; highest prize £20,000 sterling, and 150 other prizes, ranging downward so low as £10, but nothing short of that amount; the ticket itself costing the moderate sum of £7.

"Now there are six of us," he went on; "and if I can induce Mr. Robinson, our landlord, to take the seventh share, it will only come to a pound each—not much to lose and so much to gain. What say you all?"

Of course we agreed; and forthwith our chief sallied forth to confer with our host and to purchase the ticket.

"It's all right, I have it—very well I went in time, for it was the very last left; how lucky we are!" exclaimed the Governor on his return a few hours later; and he flourished the lottery ticket before our eyes.

"I hope it will stick to us," remarked the Judge, doubtingly.

"It is sure to be a prize," prophecied our sanguine Irish friend, the Commissary-General.

"At all events, 'never venture, never have,'" I added hopefully; but the ladies remained silent.

"And now," continued the Governor, "since we cannot possibly learn the result for some weeks, suppose we pass the time elsewhere than in this hot city. We have seen all that is to be seen; and, for my part, I am sick of the cathedral, and the crowded plaza, and the mole, and NELSON'S wound.* We want rest and refreshing breezes in the highlands; let us betake ourselves to the mountain brow, to Oratava, the Villa of the Peak."

The proposition was hailed with the delight of people who had nothing better to suggest; but a difficulty presented itself at the outset in the fact that none of us, except the Chief-Justice, understood a word of the language, and in a Spanish hotel we should be all adrift.

However, in our distress and perplexity a deus ex machinâ presented himself in the person of an English-speaking Spanish gentleman who came to call upon us; and, on the case being stated to him, he informed us that he was himself desirous of visiting Oratava, and would gladly do so in our company.

Accordingly, next day saw us all wending our way across the island in an omnibus drawn by a triangular arrangement, of first a mule, as leader, then two mules, and then two horses in the shafts. The day was bright, warm and exhilarating, the pace rapid, and the scenery exquisite and sublime; more especially when we reached an elevated plateau that commanded a full view of the far-famed Peak, and the iron-bound coast-line far as the eye could reach washed by mightiest breakers. But I have no intention of being descriptive; abler pens than mine have failed in the attempt to word-paint this garden of the Hesperides; I am only lingering en route in a tantalizing mood, to pile up your agony as regards "No. 3060."

Our days passed pleasantly at Oratava. There were gardens to visit, ferns to collect, and an antediluvian tree to gaze wonderingly at in its grand decay. We took long rides, too, in the neighborhood; and actually handled the lava that, in days of yore, had swept down the sides of the great mountain. We descended into the sultry lowlands and we climbed the snow-capped Peak, thus diversifying our temperature within the hour—

"For there may be snow on the mountain-top,
While there's heat in the valley below."

Time passed unnoticed, by all except by two of us, myself and our worthy friend and interpreter, the Spaniard. Properly speaking, this gentleman was not a Spaniard, although he wished to be considered one, nor even was he a native of Teneriffe. He was a settler from Gibraltar, and, as all the initiated know, such individuals are cylept "Rock-Scorpoins," as a Rock-Scorpion, therefore, I shall speak of him henceforth.

With him I concocted an abominable scheme. It was the day that the news of the lottery might arrive from Madrid, and why should we not anticipate it?

It was a vile, unfeeling, disgraceful undertaking, as you, shall see; but once the devil took possession of us, (and in no other way can I account for it,) we entered heart and soul into carrying out the details of the plot as completely as our means would permit of.

Imprimis, we required official paper, and in the ill-supplied shops of Oratava none was to be had; no paper was, in fact, procurable except "gold-edged post," quite unfitted for our purpose. However, we made the best of it. I snipped the edges with a pair of scissors, and when folded lengthwise the document assumed a formidable shape. But even this fictitious resemblance to "an official" was denied us, as the largest envelope in the stationary establishment was not so large as some I had myself, and they were small enough. On the subject-matter and style of composition we were, therefore, compelled to rely, and in this respect we were not mistaken.

I was aware that it had been arranged by the Governor with Mr. Robinson, of the English hotel in Santa Cruz, that should the steamer arrive at any unusual hour so as to prevent him sending the news by the ordinary post, and should our ticket, No. 3,060, be the winner of a prize, a special messenger should be dispatched with the happy intelligence.

Accordingly the Rock Scorpion and I invested in a small boy mounted on a mule, and we instructed the imp in what manner he was to act.

These preparations made to our entire satisfaction, we joined our party, and sat down composedly to the olla podrida set before us.

"Good gracious! this is actually the 1st of April!" exclaimed the Governor, as he helped the dish, "the day the steamer from Lisbon is due; I wonder shall we hear anything? I don't think Robinson will disappoint us if we have had any luck."

"You are too sanguine, dear; do be less hopeful, and we may win something," said his wife.

"For my part, I have never given the thing a second thought," boasted the Chief-Justice; "the chances are a thousand to one against us. Besides, I put little faith in these Government-managed lotteries. Indeed, I disapprove of such gambling sources of revenue for any respectable country."

"Thank you for your opinion of us," returned the Rock-Scorpion, sarcastically; "but still I don't suppose you would object to win a prize from us, would you?"

"I shouldn't, at any rate," put in the Commissary-General.

"Nor I, dear," whispered his better half; "for I should know what to do with such a god-send."

"Oh! don't desecrate the name; remember, this is a gambling transaction," cried the Governor's wife, who caught the expression. "I really believe I should tremble to touch money won so easily. I agree with the Judge, it cannot be right or proper—it's nae canny."

"Hallos! what's the row below?" I cried, on recognizing the clatter of the mule's hoofs entering the paved patio of the establishment. An unintelligible shout now resounded in the quadrangular courtyard, and involuntarily we all started to our feet, then, impelled by irresistible curiosity, rushed to the gallery overlooking the yard, and craned our necks to catch sight of the indubitable "special messenger." But almost immediately dignity and decorum returned to us and we resumed our seats silently at the table.

I noticed that we all closed our lips very closely, (I did so, I suppose, from sympathy,) and that a pallid hue seemed to pervade our faces.

It certainly seemed an age until our lugubrious waiter slowly entered the room and handed a broadly-sealed letter to the Governor.

"El Gobernador de ——, y los éstrangeros Ingleses," he read aloud. "Yes, there is no mistaking the Pillars of Hercules," his Excellency went on, glancing at the dollar-impressed seal; and here in the corner is a memo. from Robinson: 'Please pay the messenger a dollar and a half.' Certainly—certainly. Here, Juan, money for the messenger; feed him, too;" and he placed a handful of silver in the waiter's hand. "And now I think I have earned the right to open this official from the Lottery-office at Santa Cruz; but I am sorry to say I cannot read it. However, it is certain that we have won a prize, and, great or small, it is entirely my doing. I shall, therefore, claim you all as my guests for another month, and we shall spend it in Madeira. Do you consent?"

"Oh, yes, yes!" we all cried; "but do open the letter."

He broke the seal rudely, abstracted the document within, and flung the envelope under the table. Our excitement became intense.

"Well, what is it?" asked one of the ladies, impatiently.

"I cannot make it out; the figures are many, but the amount is stated in fuertes—dollars; do you read the letter, Judge," and his Excellency handed the missive across to the imperrtable Chief-Justice, who translated it slowly, with all its circumlocution, pausing for a moment as he came to the figures. It was merely a stiff and formal announcement from the Secretary to inform his Excellency and the other English strangers sojourning in the island that their ticket in the Madrid lottery, No. 3,060, was the successful holder of a prize which, reduced to English currency, amounted to the round sum of £9,000 sterling.

Stunned we were at first and utterly confounded; then, as the Irish Commissary-General found his voice and uttered a war-whoop of joy, we all joined in a jubilant shout, and madness ruled the hour.

Of course I was bound to be especially extravagant, and I must say my joy was extravagant.

"Well, say what one will, the love of pelf is only human nature after all," remarked the Chief-Justice, sententiously. "I must congratulate you, my dear friends, on our exceeding great good fortune." And the Judge gravely stretched forth his hand to grasp us all in turn. It isn't every day that you and I (addressing me) come in for £1,285 14s. 3d.; that is our share and Mr. Robinson's, you know," (for he had made a rapid mental calculation while some of us were going through the slow process of pencil and paper.) "Of course you married folks are entitled to double shares."

"What!" exclaimed Mrs. —— to her husband, the Commissary-General, "can it indeed be possible that we are actually in possession of—of, let me see, (and pencil and paper,) of—oh, delightful!—£2,571 8s. 7d.? Now, John, you must promise me one thing at once,"—and she drew his head down lovingly, so as to impart her proposition whisperingly—"you must put one thousand in the Bank of England for Tommy, and let the interest accumulate until he comes of age. Won't you promise, dear?"

The words reached me, and for the first time, strange as it may appear, the villany of the trick I was playing struck me as with its open palm on the cheek, and I felt the very roots of my hair grow red. Tommy was their little boy, eight years old, at school in England.

But the ball had been set a-rolling down hill now, and for the life of me I could not stop it. I could not find words to tell them it was all a cruel, wretched, merciless imposture. I became for the nonce a speechless hypocrite, and kept up the farce with a nervous eagerness that must have been quickly detected had they been in their sober senses.

All I could do was to jump about and clap my hands like a driveling idiot, but in their present state of delirium, any passionate excess was unheeded.

It was soon felt by all that the dinner table was no place to discuss private intentions, and as, of course, no one could eat, we separated into natural groups. The Governor and his wife entered the big sitting-room and seated themselves in close conference on a sofa in a remote corner. The Commissary-General and his spouse retired to their rooms to talk of little Tommy and that bargain about the thousand pounds; while the Chief-Justice, who had at length caught the prevailing enthusiasm, seized me closely by the arm and muttered gutturally:

"Come out and walk—I want air! Hang it, man!" he went on as we gained the street, "I despise wealth, and only regard money for the comforts it brings; but to give away a pound haphazard and to get back £1,285 14s. 3d. all for nothing!—come, step out!"

He was tall, and I am short, and his strides were long. I tell you I had to keep at a run by his side during that six-mile walk up hill and down dale.

He spoke not again until we reached the hotel; no doubt his thoughts were given up to the contemplation of our wonderful luck, and he was mentally reviewing the scene at the table.

Suddenly we encountered the waiter.

"I wish I had seen that messenger—where is he? Did you give him the money?" asked the Judge, in Spanish.

"No, señor," was Juan's reply; the muchacho had disappeared, he (Juan) had returned the dinero to his Excellency, and the latter had allowed him to keep so much,—and the lugubrious creature displayed to our view five bright shillings.

"Very extraordinary!" murmured the Judge appealingly to me, and his face fell in a fearfully portentous manner. I felt a cold shiver run down my back, and a strange huskiness in my throat, but I was not obliged to say anything, so we hurried upstairs.

"The messenger has gone back to Santa Cruz without his douceur," said the Governor in a reassuring tone, advancing to us. "Poor boy! he could not, of course, read Robinson's memo., and, perhaps, thought that he was not to be paid until his return; it don't matter much, but let me tell you what does. I have just been relating to my wife a circumstance that happened to me in Spain years ago. This is not the first time, I should tell you, that I have dabbled in lotteries, and on one occasion, when my brother and I were staying in Madrid, we took a ticket in a small lottery. The ticket took a prize of dollars, and the highest prize was one hundred pounds. We won it! Thus is, perhaps, why my ambitious thoughts made me imagine that we had a chance of the twenty thousand pounds now. But we have done very well and I should not grumble. When we went to the office next day to be paid, what do you think they offered us? Coppers, Sir, coppers! "Gold and silver have we none," they told us, "take the coppers or leave them." They were piled up in bags in a corner ready counted for us, and what were we to do? Of course we took them; but, gracious! what a job it was. I had first to go to the alcalde and obtain from him a guard of soldiers; then we hired men and wheelbarrows, and in this way conveyed our hundred pound of coppers to our hotel. Now think of it for a moment, if they played us the same trick here—nine thousand pounds in coppers! Gold, as you are aware, is at a high premium, so are bills of exchange; no chance of our being paid by either medium. My belief then, is that they will pay us in silver, and my idea is this: as the Secretary directs us to attend at the office to-morrow to present our ticket and receive our prize, I purpose that you and I (addressing me) ride down, to-night, to Santa Cruz by moonlight. It is only twenty-seven miles, and we'll take our time and be ready after breakfast to attend when the lottery office opens at ten o'clock. Then when we ascertain their method of paying us, we can make our arrangements. I shall ask my friend, the Governor, for a military guard, and we can cart the bags of silver up here for distribution. Now go out and hire two strong and sure-footed ponies, and direct them to be sent here for us after supper."

Naturally, I had to comply, but my heart misgave me as I passed out, to notice that the ladies were in close consultation, and that the Secretary's letter was in one of their hands.

All this while the Rock-Scorpion was disregarded and forgotten by everybody. He had felt himself de trop, and had betaken himself to his chamber, but I now passed him in the verandah, on his way to the sitting-room, as I hurried out.

I hurried out indeed, but not upon the errand I had undertaken, but to think—think think. My head ached with the thoughts of the wrong I was inflicting—with the miserable dread of discovery before I could explain matters, and with the innumerable plans that I formed and rejected to break the killing, unpardonable news that No. 3,060 was a delusion and a snare.

When I returned to the sitting-room I found our party in confusion and a very Babel of voices in hot dispute concerning the letter.

"I say that gold-edged paper was never used in an official form before; look at that; it is plain that the vile wretch, whoever he is, that has played us this dastardly trick, tried to clip off all the gold, but left so much to tell the tale!" and the Governor's wife, who was the speaker, held up to view the tiniest bit of gold edge at a corner of the abominable production.

"That, coupled with the disappearance of the messenger, is conclusive evidence in my opinion," assented the Chief-Justice.

"Oh! I have explained his absence I thought," said the Governor, who still hoped against hope.

"If I thought it was a trick played us by any garlic-eating Spaniard," growled the Irish Commissary-General looking ominously across at the trembling Rock-Scorpion, and elevating his voice as he went along, "I would grip my blackthorn by this"—and he grasped it in the middle—"and I would clutch the fellow tight around the throat, so"—and he performed the mimic gesture—"and I would thrash him within an inch of his miserable life. I would, by heavens!"

His wife meantime had disappeared from the room, and returned as he finished with that fierce vow of vengeance.

Irrepressible tears coursed down her cheeks as she advanced to the group, with an envelope in her hand.

"A Manchester envelope never came out of a Spanish lottery-office," she sobbed forth. "See, there—there is the trade-mark!" Oh! poor little Tommy; how hard it is to bear this cruel disappointment!"—and she leaned against her big angry husband.

"Why don't you suggest something?" asked the Judge, suddenly turning sharp round toward poor silent shivering me. "Do you think it a hoax, a contemptible, unfeeling, practical joke at our expense, or what do you think?"

"I can't think," I returned, sadly—and it was certainly the best answer I could have made, for we were evidently suspected, under the circumstances.

Shortly afterward the Rock-Scorpion and I left the room, and I made him, on pain of an immediate sound beating from that awful blackthorn, indite another letter setting forth that the secretary was sorry to inform the English strangers that 3,060 was not the number of the winning ticket; that the right figure was 3,061. It was a poor, lame attempt at getting out of the scrape, a sort of hysterical won't-you-forgive-me style of thing, and I was thoroughly ashamed of it. But it was transmitted to the Governor in due course, and when he opened it the farce was at an end, the tragedy commenced.

Some people never credit a thing entirely until they see it in black and white; and there it was in black and white, in mean, base, deceitful words that seemed to shrink from showing themselves in patent black and white. It was the straw that broke the camel's back.

"I wouldn't have played such a trick on a cat," sighed the Governor as the flush of incipient fever mounted to his brow, and he retired to his room followed silently by his wife.

The Commissary-General advanced a step and clutched his blackthorn menacingly, but yielding to his gentle wife he, too, quietly withdrew.

For an instant the Chief-Justice hesitated and glared with frenzied eye at the two miserable culprits on the sofa, then seizing his hat he planted it firmly on the back of his head and stalked out of the house into the noiseless streets and on, on, over mountain and plain seven-and-twenty miles down into Santa Cruz.

How I passed that night I cannot tell; it was not in bed; a stupor overcame me, and I suppose I remained on that hard horse-hair sofa. The sight of the Rock-Scorpion I loathed, and I told him so. As, therefore, he had no friend left among us, he departed at daylight; and I have not since set eyes upon him.

A physician was summoned next morning to attend the Governor, and he recommended change to the mild warmth of Santa Cruz so soon as his Excellency could be safely moved.

There was, therefore, good excuse for them to remain in their rooms; but so also did the Commissary-General and his wife, without excuse. It was evident I was to be "cut" and I sat down to a sorrowful meal all alone and choking with mingled remorse and pain.

So passed that day and another. On the third, the Governor was to leave, and he was resting in the big sitting-room awaiting his conveyance when I chanced to enter.

The sight of him as he lay there pale and dejected oppressed me greatly; I think tears filled my eyes, for, noticing my emotion, he held out his hand and pardoned me.

"I feel sure you had no idea of the length you were going to," he said, simply; "but, my boy, remember that auri sacra fames is universal, and that you hurt a man to the quick when you touch his pocket. That money was ours to all intents and purposes; we had already determined what to do with it, and you have deprived us of that pleasure. It was the most dangerous of practical jokes."

He spoke truly, but reproof was unneeded; the crime carried its own punishment.

Little further passed at our interview, and he left shortly after for Santa Cruz, while I, relieved beyond measure by our reconciliation, sallied out for a day's excursion.

I returned late in the evening, and was engaged in my solitary supper, when suddenly my Irish friend opened his door and came forward.

"The Governor has made up with you, I understand," he said, almost gruffly; "and so shall I. Tip us your fist, old boy. I can't bear to see you all alone, and yet I hate you, for you have nearly killed me and my poor wife;"—and he squeezed my hand unmercifully—"but you are not out of the wood yet, let me tell you; you forget that the Judge wasn't such an old friend of yours, and he is not so weak as to make up in a hurry, not without satisfaction, you understand? Remember, you are in a foreign country; and, I am sorry to say, he has written to me to the effect that he will have you out."

It was not a comforting reflection that instantly occurred to my mind: "Have you escaped the perils of pestilential Africa to fall now by the bullet of a judicious duelist?"

"I am fully aware of the consequences of my unwarrantable liberty," I replied, "and am bound to give him the satisfaction he requires, arrauge it when and where you like."

"I'll see what I can do," he returned, carelessly; "meantime we will remain on here quietly. And now come and make your peace with my wife."

It was fully a week after this that I arranged to return to Santa Cruz, with the idea of having the duel over at once, one one way or the other, and I rode across country all alone, arriving as night fell at the hotel.

The English mail steamer had come into port, and, anxious for letters, I went at once to Mr. Robinson's office.

"You are still in time for dinner, if you hurry," he said; "a large number of passengers came ashore to dine here, and you may know some of them."

I hastened to the table-d'hote, but as I advanced along the corridor to the door of the dining-room, I was arrested by hearing my own name mingled with shouts of laughter from the company, and one voice clear above the others, as though causing the mirth by some recital.

It was the Governor's, and he was in the act of narrating, with all embellishment and in his own quaint irresistible manner, the lottery trick and its consequences.

I stood in the doorway.

"And there he is, the villain!" cried his Excellency, pointing at me with a theatrical flourish. There stands the horrid contriver of this detestable practical joke—gave us nine thousand pounds, gentlemen, and then 'robbed us of that which not enriches him, and makes us poor indeed.'"

I was received with cheers long and loud; and, amid it all, the Chief-Justice, who was present, held out the hand of good-fellowship, and there was peace once more in the land. Tabula solvitur risu.—London Society.

PROCESSIONS TO ST. PAUL'S.—The triumphs and processions of Queen ANNE'S reign form an important part of the modern history of St. Paul's. The very year of her ascent she came with great pomp to thank God for the successes of JOHN, Earl of Marlborough, in the Low Countries, and of the Duke of ORMOND and Sir GEORGE ROOKE in the port of Vigo, where they had sunk many Spanish ships and taken rich spoil. The Queen's throne was covered with a Persian carpet, and on a footstool behind her sat the Countess of MARLBOROUGH. The House of Lords and the House of Commons were present on this joyful occasion, as well as the Lord Mayor, Aldermen and Sheriffs. The old Whig Bishop of Exeter, Sir JONATHAN TRELAWNEY ("And Shall Trelawney die?"—that Trelawney)—preached a battle sermon on the exulting text, "But as for you, no man hath been able to stand before you this day." The Tower guns, those on the river, and those in St. James' Park, were fired three times—once when the Queen took coach at St. James', once when the Te Deum was chanted, and the last time on the Queen's return to the palace. There was another procession to St. Paul's for the victory of Blenheim; another when MARLBOROUGH forced the French lines at Tirlemont; a third for Ramillies and PETERBOROUGH'S successes in Catalonia; again for Oudenarde; and lastly, in 1713, for the welcome peace of Utrecht; but this last time the Queen did not come. The Houses of Parliament were, however, there; and for the first time the charity children of London—4,000 in number—in eight rows, occupying a space of 620 feet, were assembled in the streets round St. Paul's. The House of BRUNSWICK, too, began early to express their admiration of the Cathedral; for on the accession of GEORGE I. in 1714, the King, Princes and Princesses went in state to St. Paul's; but after this, says MILMAN, there were no more royal visits till the thanksgiving of GEORGE III. on his recovery in 1789.

For seventy years no English King entered St. Paul's in State. The citizens, therefore, rejoiced to see old King GEORGE III. come, with all the insignia of rank, on April 25, 1789, on his recovery from his temporary insanity. Old Queen CHARLOTTE was with him, the scapegrace Prince of WALES, and the Duke of YORK. Both Houses of Parliament were present, and 6,000 charity children joined in the service of the choir. In 1797 the King came again, in thanksgiving for our naval victories. French, Spanish, and Dutch flags were borne in the procession; the latest of these trophies was from glorious Camperdown, Lord DUNCAN bearing the flag of DE WINTER. NELSON was present at this ceremonial, little thinking that his future grave lay beneath the very spot on which he then trod.—Walter Thornbury in Belgravia.

REFUSE AND WASTE.—Turning to the more miscellaneous items which afford instances of the use of waste, we may mention vulcanized India-rubber. At one time it was thought the process of vulcanization—in other words, treating the rubber with sulphur—prevented the possibility of its being used again. It has been discovered, however, that it can be reduced to a plastic state and remanufactured. About seventy per cent. of the waste material is mixed with thirty per cent. of raw gum, and the resultant rubber is as good as that made wholly of fresh gum. This discovery tended to cheapen this material very much, as at the time it was made the refuse material was selling for £18 a ton, while the pure gum sold at prices varying from £150 to £200 a ton.

The sawdust of various woods is now turned to good purposes—that of box-wood is used for cleaning jewelry, while mahogany sawdust is employed for smoking fish. Birch and rose-wood sawdust is used by furriers in cleansing furs. In Paris common sawdust is very ingeniously utilized. A method has been discovered of forcing this material into solid moulds by the aid of heat and the hydraulic press. The sawdust thus pressed is said to present a brilliant surface, which possesses great durability.

Turning our attention from the vegetable to the animal kingdom, we may add that a beautiful and nutritious jelly is made from ivory-dust, which is very strengthening to invalids. This is the only portion of the elephant that is eaten in England; but the flesh of this animal is consumed by the natives of Africa, and GORDON CUMMING says that elephants' feet are a very great delicacy.

In the search that has been made for a new paper-making material there has been some success. Good paper is now made from esparto, a wild grass growing in Spain and the Barbary coast in large quantities. It certainly makes very good paper, and might take the pressure off rags, which are still rather scarce and dear. It was imagined that when the trade was opened with China the teeming population of that great empire, dressing as it does in cotton goods to a large extent, would be able to yield us a plentiful supply of old rags. Those who counted upon this source of supply knew but little of the economical habits of the Chinese. Rags were not likely to be wasted in that country. On inquiry, it turned out that the material in question was used up—for what purpose does our reader think?—for making the thick soles for boots! As may be imagined, all waste paper is sorted—the clean, such as the shavings and clippings from book-binders and envelope-makers, is worked up afresh as white paper. The fluff of cotton that is given off during the course of manufacture is, however, available for paper-making, and for the manufacture of coarse sheets and bed-covers.—Cassell's Magazine.

THE GREAT FIRE OF 1666.—This great conflagration began at the King's bake-house in Pudding-lane about 10 o'clock on Saturday night, Sept. 2, 1666. PEPYS, ever bustling and pompous, was awoke at 3 o'clock on the Sunday morning, and from his house in Seething-lane, near the Tower, sallied out and saw London Bridge on fire; he instantly took a boat, and passing under the blazing bridge, pushed for Whitehall, to be the first to convey the intelligence to the King and the Duke of YORK. Returning in Capt. COOK'S coach, he found St. Paul's still safe, but the people in Watling-street already busy removing their goods. In Cannon-street he met the Mayor, worn out and almost beside himself because no one would pull down the houses he ordered to be pulled down, and the flames were spreading fast. In the evening the goods were removed from Cannon-street to Lombard-street.

PEPYS landed with the royal party at a small public house on the Bankside, Southwark. There, says PEPYS, "we stood and saw the fire grow; and as it grew darker appeared more and more, and in corners and upon steeples and between churches and houses as far as we could see up the city, in a most horrid, bloody, malicious flame, not like the flame of an ordinary fire. We stayed till, it being darkish, we saw the fire as only one entire arch of fire from this to the other side of the bridge, and at a bow up the Hill for an arch of above a mile long." The night was light as day for ten miles round, the glare visible for forty miles round, the clouds of smoke trailing, as EVELYN records, nearly fifty miles. "God grant," says good Mr. EVELYN, "that mine eyes may never see the like, who now saw above ten thousand houses all in one flame. The noise and cracking and thunder of the impetuous flames, the shrieking of women and children, the hurry of people, the fall of towers, houses and churches, was like a hideous storm; and the air about so hot and inflamed, that at the last one was not able to approach it, so that they were forced to stand still and let the flames burn on, which they did, about two miles in length and one in breadth."

On the Tuesday, about 8 o'clock, TASWELL, an eye-witness, describes seeing the fire break out on the top of St. Paul's, the scaffolding first catching. It had become a place of refuge and a store-house for all the burnt-out people in the neighborhood. Its isolation and immense thickness of the walls had made the citizens regard it as absolutely secure, and the book-sellers of the adjoining streets had filled the Church of St. Faith's (in the crypt of St. Paul's) with vast stores of books. By 9 o'clock, says TASWELL, "it blazed so conspicuous as to enable me to read very clearly a 16mo edition of TERENCE which I carried in my pocket." The Cathedral stood like a martyr at the stake; the stones burst and flew like hand-grenades. The melted lead (from six acres of roof) ran down the streets in a glittering stream. The very pavement grew so hot that neither horse nor man could approach with engines. The monuments, columns, friezes, capitals, split or were calcined. The vaulted roof falling in broke into St. Faith's, and the books caught fire, smouldering for a whole week, the ashes blowing as far as Eton. The beautiful portico was destroyed, nothing remaining entire but the inscription on the architrave, of which not one letter was defaced. One tomb, that of a Bishop, stood uninjured, and the lead over the east end of the altar was untouched. Soon after sunrise TASWELL, then a Westminster boy, visited the ruins, and says, "And now let any person judge of the extreme emotion I was in when I perceived the metal belonging to the bells melting, the ruinous condition of the walls, with heaps of stones of a large circumference tumbling down with a great noise about my feet, ready to crush me to death. I prepared myself for retiring back again, having first loaded my pockets with several pieces of bell-metal." Near the east end of the church he saw the charred body of an old woman, and presently he met burning engines hurried from the irresistible flames. In this fire were destroyed the monuments of BACON'S father, Sir PHILIP SIDNEY VANDYCK and Sir CRISTOPHER HATTON; that of DOUNE, the poet, was preserved, though in a mutilated state.—Walter Thornbury in Belgravia.

HOUSES IN HOLLAND.—A substantial Amsterdammer's house, plain only on the outside, is resplendent with white marble and glorious with carved work within. The walls of the chief rooms have often been painted by first-rate artists, and Italian sculptors must have had a fine time of it in the wealthy city, for their hand is to be seen on cornice and balustrade in many a simple merchant's house.

The British-born bow-window is not often to be seen even in the country, and the more antique oriel seems never to have been adopted by post-reformation architects. But Mevrouw is not without the power of seeing up and down the street at will, as she sits at her work; for by the little spiegelen—spy-mirrors—suspended upon strong metal work on either side of her sitting-room window, she can calmly survey, herself out of view, the passing crowd and scene below.

The basement floor is always raised a few feet above the surface of the ground, to steal a little height in air for the kitchen, the floor of which is even then a foot or two below the level of the underlying ooze, but of course ooze-tight with cement—Bettinji, the cook, is stout and healthy notwithstanding—and ascending from the street by a flight of five or six steps, a very solid door admits you to a long and narrow passage, lofty and marbled on either side, and lighted by glass above the door. The drawing-room, or, not unusually, the counting-house, with this passage, takes up the entire width of the house.

The first thought one has on entering any Dutch chamber, a drawing-room not excepted, is, "How very long!" the next, "How very bare!" Everything is handsome; but there is so little of it. No lounging-chairs, no round table with knick-knackeries; a cabinet with closed glass doors, of course, chairs placed in formal rows, a handsome chandelier, a stove-place, and that is all. You take a seat, and, perhaps, touch the wall with your elbow—lo! it yields to the touch. Wall-paper is a misnomer in Holland. Paper-hangings is the proper word. These sometimes are of oil-paintings on canvas, sometimes of paper stretched on canvas fastened on light wood-en frames, which can be taken down bodily when their gay coverings have to be renewed. Evidently, these are the next descendants from tapestry and arras. The walls may be damp, and very probably are so, but then "they assume a virtue, if they have it not;" for one's eyes are never offended in Holland by dripping, smeared, washed-out wall-paper.

The bedrooms are also but scantily furnished, and, except in guest chambers, one does not often see a chest of drawers or a wardrobe. A foreign visitor, indeed, is apt to be at a loss what to do with clothes until he discovers that doors, cunningly concealed, open into cupboards all about the room. By the way, Mevrouw always hangs her dresses in these; she seldom folds them in a drawer.

At the top of the house, both in town and country, is invariably to be found a spacious laundry, extending, in fact, over the whole area of the house. In this the linen is stored in presses, and the clothing of the past season, Winter or Summer, all duly turned inside out, hangs on pegs all about. Here, twice in the year, Mevrouw holds her grand saturnalia. Without doubt, the most important item in a Dutch girl's dowry is linen. The quantity she thinks necessary for her own person and for household purposes is enormous. But then it should be known that she "washes" (the linen, of course) but twice in the year. Cuffs, collars and muslins, she says, must be washed often; but all other things are flung, for a time, into huge buck-baskets big enough for half-a-dozen Falstaffs to hide in; indeed, these are astounding baskets, and when full will weigh four or five hundred weight. Every house has a block and pulley firmly fixed to the ornamented coping of the roof, which, indeed, is purposely constructed to carry this useful machine, and forms a noticeable feature in the architecture of all the Dutch houses; and by means of the block, these huge baskets are readily lifted to and from the laundry, and furniture or heavy articles of any kind to the other stories through the windows. A visitor for the first time may see with amused bewilderment that particularly lumbering trunk of his wife's, which has been the despair of railway porters throughout his journey, whipped up by invisible hands to a height of sixty or seventy feet in no time, and disappear through a bedroom window. The clothes are simply rough-washed in the country, and when sent back all the females in the house set to work for a good fortnight to mangle and iron, starch and crimp; and you may be sure that every bit of clothing a Dutch young lady of the middle classes is wearing has thus been got up by her own fair hands. The original outlay in linen is no doubt large, but the cheap mode of washing pays good interest for the money.

One thing is very remarkable in a Dutchman's house. You never see open bookshelves, and a stray book but seldom. The fact is, in the first place, that all books and personal property are stored away in the treasury cupboard in the bedroom; and next, paterfamilias, while exercising a rigid censorship over all light and heavy literature dispersed about the house, keeps his own most carefully under lock and key. The books he has are not many, for Holland can scarcely be said to have a literature; and great linguist though he be, with a familiar acquaintance with at least two, sometimes three or four, modern languages besides his own, he contents himself with a few well-bound standard works in these, and for light reading, is there not the newspaper? Besides, as office hours are generally from 9 to 9, the Dutchman has not much time for reading, and gets but little out of books when he has once laid them aside after leaving school and entered upon the realities of life.—London Society.

BRAIN-WEIGHT.—An eminent German Professor once assumed that, as a certain size and mass of brain is essential for the exercise of the mental faculties, therefore all the human race must be furnished with an equal amount of brains. This truly Teutonic theory has since, however, been effectually dissipated. An elaborate paper was read, not very long ago, before the Royal Society, in which the existing evidence as to the weight of brain among different nations was analyzed. The average brain-weight for the English is stated to be 47.50 ounces; for the French, 44.58; for the Germans, 42.83; but, there are discrepancies in the results of different observers, some giving a greater average than this to the Germans. The Italians, Lapps, Swedes, Frisans and Dutch come into the same category with the English. Among the Asiatic races, the Vedahs of Ceylon and the Hindoos give a mean of over 43.11 ounces. The skulls of Mussulmans afford a slightly increased average of brain-weight over those of the Hindoos. Two skulls of male Khonds—one of the unquestioned aboriginal races of India—show a brain-weight of only 37.87 ounces. The general average of the Asiatic table shows a diminution of more than two ounces when compared with the Europeans. The general mean of African races is less than that of European races, although there are great differences; the Caffre rising high, and the Bushman sinking low, in the scale. The average of the whole of the aboriginal American races reaches 44.73 ounces, which is 2.14 ounces less than that of the European races. The Australian races show a brain-weight one-ninth less than that of the general average of Europeans. The Malays and others of the Oceanic races, who migrated boldly, for commercial purposes, over the North and South Pacific Ocean, and occupy the islands, show a tolerably high average of brain-weight; and, on arriving at this section, we return in some measure to the large brain-weight of Europeans.—Once a Week.

DREAMS.—Dreams are to our waking thoughts much like echoes to music; but their reverberations are so partial, so varied, so complex, that it is almost in vain we seek among the notes of consciousness for the echoes of the dream. If we could by any means ascertain on what principle our dreams for a given night are arranged, and why one idea more than another furnishes their cue, it would be comparatively easy to follow out the chain of associations by which his laugh, the fat self-satisfied chuckle; his large protruding under-lip, the true character of sensuality; but his memory was notoriously treacherous, and the text suffered severely.

"D—n your dialogue! give me the situations." As DUCROW, in more recent days, was wont to exclaim, "Cut out the dialect and come to the 'osses!" but SHAKESPEARE cannot be so cavalierly treated with impunity.—London Society.

THE MAN-FROM-MONKEY THEORY

Absurdity of Mr. Darwin's Hypothesis.

From a Review in the London Times, April 3.

If, in short, in its general application, Mr. DARWIN's hypothesis is utterly unsupported by observed facts, it is still more destitute of such support in its application to man. Mr. DARWIN himself admits two things—first that the difference is immense between the highest monkey and the lowest savage; and, secondly, that "this great break in the organic chain cannot be bridged over by any existent or living species," or, as he again expresses it, that "the connecting links between man and some lower form have not hitherto been discovered." No monkey has been discovered which is even comparable with man; no race of savages, however degraded, can be regarded as on a level with monkeys. If Mr. DARWIN's hypothesis were true, it is almost incredible that no evidence should be producible of the existence of apelike creatures closely allied to man, and showing a tendency to further development. On the other hand, we have the undoubted and recorded experience of at least 4,000 years of history, during which many races of man have been subjected to influences the most diversified and the most favorable to the further development of their faculties. After the lapse of that time, man remains as distinctly man as he was before, just as all the animals with which he is acquainted have preserved their specific characteristics. It is more than questionable whether his faculties have in any degree improved. He has accumulated knowledge, he has increased the instruments of his thought and action, and his power has thus been augmented. But there is some reason to think, with PLATO, that these numerous aids have actually debilitated his natural vigor of body and mind. At all events, it is in glaring contrast with Mr. DARWIN's theory of continuous development to observe that the earliest known examples of man's most essential characteristics exhibit his faculties in the greatest perfection ever attained. No poetry surpasses HOMER; no religious sentiment is more sublime than that in the Book of Genesis; no art is more perfect than that of Greece; no specimens of the human form are more beautiful than the models which Greek sculptors have preserved for us. History is a continuous refutation of the theory that faculties are gradually called into existence by circumstances. On the contrary, they seem to start fully formed from the brain of man, and to work out their inherent power for the modification of circumstances. Race after race appears on the scene—the Egyptian, the Jew, the Greek, the Roman, the German, each with some special endowment working, as it were, in its blood with inexhaustible vigor. The endowment is applied in various ways, and its forms are multiplied; but it seems to lose, rather than to gain, in fulness and fervency by the lapse of time and the course of experience. The real problem of life lies in that mysterious fertility, at once so constant and so variable, by which the same nature is constantly reproduced, but by which, from time to time, germs of new energy seem developed. The solution of this problem is to be sought, not in Mr. DARWIN's facile method of observing superficial resemblances, but in the difficult task of penetrating into hidden differences. It is a problem which will be solved, if at all, not by romances in human and natural history, but by minute investigations with the microscope and in the laboratory.

We wish we could think that these speculations were as innocuous as they are unpractical and unscientific, but it is too probable that if unchecked they might exert a very mischievous influence. We abstain from noticing their bearings on religious thought, although it is hard to see how, on Mr. DARWIN's hypothesis, it is possible to ascribe to man any other immortality, or any other spiritual existence, than that possessed by the brutes. But apart from these considerations, if such views as he advances on the nature of the moral sense were generally accepted, it seems evident that morality would lose all elements of stable authority, and the "ever fixed marks," around which the tempests of human passion now break themselves, would cease to exert their guiding and controlling influence. Mr. DARWIN is careful to observe that he does not wish "to maintain that every strictly social animal, if its intellectual and social faculties were to become as active and as highly developed as man, would acquire exactly the same moral sense as ours." If this be the case, why should our existing moral sense be deemed a permanent standard? "If, for instance," says Mr. DARWIN, "to take an extreme case, men were reared under precisely the same conditions as hive-bees, there can scarcely be a doubt that our unmarried females would, like the worker bees, think it a sacred duty to kill their brothers, and mothers would strive to kill their fertile daughters, and no one would think of interfering." What is this but to place every barrier of moral obligation at the mercy of the "conditions of life?" Men, unfortunately, have the power of acting not according to what is their ultimate social interest, but according to their ideas of it; and if the doctrine could be impressed on them that right and wrong have no other meaning than the pursuit or the neglect of that ultimate interest, conscience would cease to be a check upon the wildest, or, as Mr. DARWIN's own illustration allows us to add, the most murderous revolutions. At a moment when every artificial principle of authority seems undermined, we have no other guarantee for the order and peace of life except in the eternal authority of those elementary principles of duty which are independent of all times and all circumstances. There is much reason to fear that loose philosophy, stimulated by an irrational religion, has done not a little to weaken the force of these principles in France, and that this is, at all events, one potent element in the disorganization of French society. A man incurs a grave responsibility who, with the authority of a well-earned reputation, advances at such a time the dismtegrating speculations of this book. He ought to be capable of supporting them by the most conclusive evidence of facts. To put them forward on such incomplete evidence, such cursory investigation, such hypothetical arguments as we have exposed, is more than unscientific — it is reckless.

PRIGS.—To obtain a perfect priggishness we must have insignificance acting importance, smallness affecting greatness; we must have a thorough conventionalism, accompanied by a horror lest it should be disturbed in the least degree. The "prig," too, must have some aptitude for conveying censure, more, perhaps, by his conduct than his words. He must intrude himself; he must over-estimate himself, and, as a consequence, under-estimate others. He must not let slip the opportunity of making a virtue out of a necessity, in the more literal sense of the expression. He must be dogmatic, and pragmatical. But, as I have already hinted, he must be an honest man, deceiving only himself.

"Prig" is clearly a masculine term when employed in the sense before us. "Prude," which is perhaps its nearest synonym, when a woman is concerned, is hardly the feminine equivalent. It has not such an extensive signification. Punctiliousness, which, when in excess, is undoubtedly a great element of "priggism," does not necessarily take more than one form in the prude. There is no doubt in her a great pretension of exactitude, propriety, reticence; but these may only be boasted of in dealings with the other sex. The prig, on the contrary, takes them with him, posts them up, advertises them in every possible way, in every possible event of life.

I am persuaded that there are prigs in every calling, and in every condition of life, from the little dissenting green-grocer to the descendant of "a hundred earls." The little green-grocer will probably look grave and sad while contemplating you in your unconverted state, or smile his sanctification at you across the counter in a manner which almost forces upon you the notion that he thinks there is something catching in it. The nobleman looks a long way exactly over your head, and puts to you a question in a tone of courteous severity. But between these, alas! what an infinity of prigs! what a variety, between these! There is the priggishness of dress, of clique, of profession, of trade, of notoriety in any shape. And there are certainly some institutions which advance the cause of priggishness wonderfully, and develop the thing itself to an alarming extent.

A prig cannot be a hypocrite in any degree, and is seldom one at all; and this, because it is one of the very first conditions of priggishness that a man should believe in himself—should, for that reason, exaggerate himself—should intrude himself upon his fellow-creatures as one who is more fortunate, more scrupulous, in everything more "proper" than they. Hypocrites do none of these things. They don't believe in themselves, to begin with; and so, when they become inflated and intrusive, they do so with the full knowledge that they are impostors. The hypocrite intends to impose upon people a conviction regarding himself which he knows to be untrue. As his name indicates, he is an actor. But the prig is no actor; he is generally as honest as he is always ridiculous; and is perhaps most contemptible when he is most assured he is right.—The Cornhill.

GERMAN ADVERTISEMENTS.—Imagine a newspaper, small quarto, of from eight to forty-eight pages, costing five shillings and fourpence a year, and devoted exclusively to advertisements—every page full of novelty, and often productive of laughter! Within reasonable limits, it is scarcely possible to convey an idea of its diversified contents. The first pages are devoted to official, police, law, and sanitary notices—notices of contracts, bankruptcies, &c.; these are followed by trade advertisements, touching silks, fish, groceries, wines, coffins, wet-nurses, and information as to how, when, and where the thousand-and-one wants of this life, and death, may be supplied. Of these we shall say nothing, but proceed at once to the social contents. What would our reserved island ladies say to finding their birthdays openly recorded under the most transparent initials, with their ages, the street and house-number duly added, in some such sort as this? "Hearty congratulations to the dear, tall, black, stout Gretchen B——, on her today's cradle-feast, at No. 18 in the Hauptgasse.

From one who knows her well,
But his name won't tell."

Or thus: "To the dear, stout, pretty blonde, Anna K——, in Wilh. St., No. 78, right hearty congratulations from a silent admirer."

At times our attention is called to a swain who has forgotten the birthday of her whom his soul loves, and who honestly confesses it by heading in capital letters, "Better late than never." After thus introducing his salutation, his effusion jingles on:

"Your birthday's past, as I do see;
Jimminy-krimminy, O dear me!
What can I say, but tell you plain,
I'll try not to forget again."

Happy couples proclaim their approaching nuptials thus: "With the loving consent of their parents, W—— H—— and S—— T—— herewith announce their betrothal."

In the following notice there is something truly Homeric: "HAVE A CARE—a fat cow will be hewn to pieces in my yard, on Tuesday, at 11 A. M. sharp, and the flesh will be sold at 3d. a lb."

About our next extract there is a grim bloodthirstiness that would have done credit to the Court of King THEODORE; it reminds one of the Pantin tragedy under patronage, and must surely emanate from one whom urgent private affairs have recalled from the scene of the war ere his appetite for horrors was satiated: "T—— M—— recommends himself for private slaughtering. Terms moderate."

Here are some miscellaneous morsels:

"To be sold cheap, a tolerably modern dress-coat, in very good preservation."

"Eleven young hens and a cock, good layers, to be sold." Is this the rara avis?

"Chamber-sportsman M—— resides at No. 7 L—— street. The above recommends himself as a medium for the destruction of all species of vermin."

We will conclude with two notices illustrative of the German national characteristics—music and economy:

"The Singing Society meet to-night at the Muckerhöhle." The name is not inviting; but the locality is historical.

And: "A gentleman wishes to hire a fur-cloak for a few weeks."—Chambers' Journal.

THE EFFEMINATE MAN.—The effeminate man is a weak poultice. He is a cross between table-beer and ginger-pop, with the cork left out. A fresh-water mermaid found in a cow-pasture, with her hands filled with dandelions. He is a tea-cup full of syllabub; a kitten in trousers; a sick monkey, with a blonde mustache. He is a vine without any tendriis; a fly drowned in oil; a paper kite in a dread calm. He lives like a butterfly—nobody can tell why. He is as harmless as a pennyworth of sugar candy, and as useless as a shirt-button without a hole. He is as lazy as a slug, and has no more hope than a last year's summer-fly. He goes through life on tiptoe, and dies like cologne water spilt over the ground.—The Figaro.

DIAMOND-SEEKERS.—Since June, 1870, an endless stream of wagons, carts and horse-traps has been flowing from the port of Durban, in the colony of Natal, to the diamond-fields on the Vaal River, 500 miles distant to the westward. These vehicles belong to parties of two or three or four, banded together in an industrial copartnership for a period of several months. Men of all ranks and occupations have been smitten by the mania. Men whose fingers never handled any tool less delicate than a pen have gone cheerfully to work with picks and shovels in quest of the precious gems. Here is a group of four youths, who have left their office-stools and combined their savings, in order to purchase this handsome wagon and oxen, and to fit it out with supplies for a twelvemonth's "dig." If they find nothing they will not starve, and on returning will betake themselves to their old employment; they will have had a year's adventurous life in the desert,—a year's hardening experience of manual labor. Here is a different party—an elderly man of magisterial presence; a younger man, of languid aspect and military air; a younger and a gayer still. The one has left his bench, the other his club; on diamond-searching bent. Their elements are less congruous than the other, and before the diamond-fields are reached a disruption will have taken place. Now we come to a huge traveling structure, a Noah's ark on wheels, dragged by twenty oxen, yoked two and two, and containing a party of eighteen men of a poorer order, who are unable to provide themselves with independent means of locomotion. Big as this traveling edifice is, it will reach its destination safely. A more original turn-out follows, in the shape of a Scotch cart drawn by eight donkeys, pulling cheerfully and well. An English boy of sixteen is in charge of this party, going, for the first time in his young life, out into the world on his own account. Such are but some of the types of traveling equipage one meets on the road to the diamond-fields.

We get our last look of Durban from the top of the Berea, a continuation of the bushy range that skirts the shore. Nineteen years ago this bush was the resort alone of bucks and leopards, with occasionally an elephant or a lion of vagrant propensities. Houses, cottages and gardens clothe the hill now, and even monkeys are retiring before the white man's advances. The deep sand of the road has been hardened, and a toll-bar—true sign of civilization—erected.

At last, when we are a month out, and 516 miles away from Durban, a long low ridge rises in front. Wagons and carts are more plentifully seen sprinkled about; and there is an instinctive feeling that we are near our journey's end. The top of the ridge is gained, and Golconda lies before us.

A broad valley, with a gentle sweep, through which winds a river about a hundred yards wide. Willow-trees skirt its banks, and they are the only sign of vegetation visible. Little rounded hills, called "Kopjes," also stand along the stream. Wagons, carts and vehicles of every kind; tents of all shapes; buildings, hastily put up, of plank, iron and brick. Ant-like figures swarming everywhere, especially near the water's edge—boats plying on the river, and a like scene of activity on the other side. A great buzz and hum. Such are one's first impressions. Getting nearer, and traversing the centre of this busy scene, one is struck by the intentness with which all do their work. Some are shoveling gravel and dirt out of their claims, some are driving this to the river-bank, where the cradles are at work; some are engaged in washing, rocking, or sorting the dirt when it gets there. Day after day the process goes on. A few hours' work in the morning, a siesta at noon, more work toward evening. Some ardent searchers toil on even by torchlight. You hear a shout, the report of a gun, and follow a rush to a certain spot, where a lucky digger has made a find. Week by week he has labored on for nought. His fingers have been scarified, and his nails worn down, to no purpose. Now, all at once, his eyes have fallen across the long-looked-for prize—this tiny bit of crystal, with its rare secretion of light. And off, with redoubled zest, the envious spectators rush to their work again.—The Cornhill.

LOVE-MAKING IN SOUTH ITALY.—Love-making by signs is very general. The method has many recommendations; for as the lovers are not seen together, and don't write, they are not easily found out. Every window opens to the floor, and has a balcony, so that neighbors have great facilities for the pastime. The language of love is very simple; it is always the same, and always interesting and new. The gentleman begins by taking out his handkerchief, which he passes over his face, looking all the time at the lady, and throwing into his face and eyes expressions of admiration for her; at the same time he compliments her on her beauty by passing his hand over his mouth and chin. The lady's answer is a blush, hiding her face, except the eyes, behind her fan, and pointing to the rear, to indicate that mamma is coming, and retreats. Next time, the same play on the gentleman's side, followed by possibly a glance, not of discouragement, from the lady; whereupon he hugs his left side, to express that he loves her to distraction; and the lady flees, to return the next day, and observe the gentleman, of course, to her great astonishment and displeasure, repeat the previous gestures, ending by showing her the palms of his hands, and looking entreaty, which any young lady even unacquainted with the particular language in question would understand to mean; I vow by &c. that I love you more than—and so forth. Do you love me? The answer to which, of course, depends upon circumstances; and thus the ancient comedy proceeds. It is understood to be extremely interesting to the dramatis personæ. Love-making, short of the "ask-papa" part, is frequently carried on in south Italy in this way; and it not seldom happens that when papa is inexorable, or the lady in a convent, the whole affair, including agreement and preparations to run away, is transacted solely by gestures—apropos of which it is on record that on an occasion of the sort, all being prepared, and the gentleman in the street waiting at the lady's door with the carriage intended to carry off the happy couple, an awfully gruff voice was heard asking, "Are you there?" The lover looked toward the voice, saw that it came from the object of his balcony affections, and, utterly disenchanted, fled. This story, although nearly as incredible as the first narrated, is given without any reserve. It is quite true.—Chambers's Journal.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

It isn't every man that knows how to keep a hotel, and some who might learn would hardly have the courage in some of our Western towns. A warfare with the cook, with a fatal termination, is among the contingencies of such an enterprise on the frontier. The Chetopa House, in Kansas, was lately closed, and the weary traveler, who had been looking forward to it as the only haven of rest for many miles around, arrived at the door only to find posted upon it the melancholy announcement. "Closed, on account of a difference between the proprietor and cook, which was settled with a pistol, and sent the proprietor to his grave and the cook to jail."

A momentous question to a large class of people has been broached in England, being nothing more nor less than the proper size of a bottle. It is said that when a person purchases a pint of wine or a quart of brandy he really receives a less quantity put up in a bottle, which by sufferance goes by the name of a pint or quart bottle, as the case may be. It is claimed that a bottle of wine ought to be some fixed quantity, say an imperial pint, and that the users of bottles should be protected in their rights. There is certainly a grievance here, and it is to be hoped that the battle of the bottles will go on until their size is properly adjusted, though it will probably be difficult to satisfy everybody with any uniform capacity.

The way young men of "high standing" in Mississippi have of settling disputes is not by any means new in that quarter, but they endeavor to display some orginality by varying the details. Two of these high-minded and high-blooded Southrons recently had a quarrel with regard to hiring some laborers. Of course, neither of them would compromise his manhood by yielding a single point, and Courts of law or the arbitration of disinterested parties were not to be thought of. Those are antiquated institutions which do well enough for Yankees and foreigners, but ne true-born son of the South will submit to anything but his own sweet will. So these young men went into a field, each with a revolver, and taking positions 200 yards apart, approached each other firing. After two or three shots had been exchanged, one of them fell dead, and the other settled the labor question according to his mind.

It is getting to be a serious question what is to be done with the smart boys. A few of these enfants terribles, if banded together, might prove "smart" enough to defy the entire community and imperil the lives of the citizens. A ragged urchin of seven years, at Gloucester, England, a few days ago, wanted to ride on a locomotive. The engineer had the insolence and presumption to refuse this trifling request, but the insulted youth resolved that he would not be treated with such contempt without making his power felt in the community of Gloucester. He accordingly set a switch wrong on the line, and a train of thirty cars ran off the track, to the great peril of the passengers. The law of the realm seems not to have been sufficient to manage this precocious youth, for a jury felt obliged to acquit him, and the Judge was so puzzled by the case that he ordered it to be "put aside for a short time." If all the children under ten were to combine to overthrow the prescriptive authority of their elders, there is little doubt that the revolution would succeed.

The affections of the lower animals are sometimes as wayward and inexplicable as those of the men and women who assume to be their betters. The story is told in a Michigan paper of a romantic attachment which sprung up between a goose and colt, a fitting type of the romantic attachments which sometimes spring up in a higher sphere of life. Everywhere that pony went the goose was sure to go, and when pony lay down the goose snuggled close up to his side. The two would fight for each other on the slightest provocation, eat from the same trough, and in every possible way express their mutual devotion. Such ill-assorted matches ought not to be encouraged in Michigan.

It is a well-known fact that wine improves with age, and as a consequence, of course, it increases in value, but any one who thinks it worth while to invest his surplus funds in wine in order to get rich by the advance in its value, may as well cipher out his sum to the end before he enters upon the speculation. There are 204 bottles of wine in a cellar at Bremen which were bought in 1624 for 500 rix dollars. Reckoning the actual expense of keeping and guarding the cellar, together with compound interest on the original price of the wine, we find that each bottle of it has cost something over half a million pounds sterling. It would be exceedingly difficult to sell this mellow beverage now at a profit on the investment, but it is no longer a drink for common mortals. Only the burgomasters of Bremen can ever indulge in this precious tipple, and they only on great occasions. When they do have a drinking bout, nothing since the banquets of VITELLIUS can compare with it in cost.

They have had a novelty in Marion County, Ohio, in the shape of a snake hunt. The serpents of that region had become so numerous and powerful that the rest of the population were in danger of being overrun and driven out of the country altogether. Children were afraid to go to school lest they should be waylaid by some slimy monster, and it was no uncommon thing for men, women and children to be pursued for miles by an army of snakes. In short, it seemed as though the primal curse of Eden had been concentrated upon Marion County, and finally the inhabitants were forced to combine together to exterminate the common enemy. A large party gathered with clubs and fire-arms, and got as many of the serpents as possible into the limits of about twenty acres of prairie land and then set fire to the dead grass all around its outer verge. The monstrous brood was driven into the centre by the flames, where they suffered the torments of the evil spirits who were wont in ancient times to assume their unattractive forms for the purpose of deceiving mankind. The leader of the crusade against these reptiles is likely to be canonized as the local St. Patrick of Marion County.

There is a modest and enterprising young man at Windham, Vt., who is trying to ascertain how far the practice of making money by the simple and easy process of passing around a subscription paper can be carried. He appeals to the generous to contribute toward paying off a mortgage on some property. This property was acquired by his father by a long life of toil and frugality, and the mortgage was acquired by another son by a short life of indolence and prodigality. No subscriptions of less than $50 will be received. As a test of some important qualities of human nature, this process may be interesting; but as a means of paying off a mortgage we have little faith in its success.

If a woman have long hair it is undoubtedly a glory unto her, provided it is growing upon her head; but if it is only stuck on by a complication of strings and pins, and really grew in other soil, there is no real ground for glorification. So little respect is entertained for property of this kind that a question was made in a London Court lately, whether taking it without permission was stealing. It was said that taking hair from a corpse was no larceny, and whether taking it from a living person, or using it after it had been removed from the former person, was theft or not, seems to have been a question beyond the ability of the Judge to decide, and so the whole subject was referred to a jury to get rid of it. As in this particular case the hair was taken from merchants after it had been imported and made an article of merchandise, the jury didn't think it worth while to split any hairs about it, but concluded that if it was a "sin to steal a pin," it must be wrong to take chignons.

There has been, not a complete parallel to be sure, but a distant approach in grandeur, to the sublime historical scene enacted on the borders of Canada something like a year ago, when Gen. O'NEILL brandished his sword above his head, shouted to his men to advance upon the soil of that devoted Province, and then was tapped on the shoulder by a United States Marshal and taken away quietly in a close carriage. It will be remembered that there was some talk, while the preliminaries of the peace between France and Germany were pending, about throwing in the remote little settlement of Pondicherry along with Alsace and Lorraine by way of helping to balance the ponderous account run up against France by the war. Of course the soul of every colonist in Pondicherry was "in arms and eager for the fray," ready to repulse any attempt of Germany to tear them from the shelter of the tricolored banner. Each day they expected to see the hosts of MOLTKE come over the sea to secure a prize so valuable. While this state of excitement existed, Her Britannic Majesty's ship Forte appeared off the harbor, and began to fire a salute by way of paying her respects to the French flag, when forth sallied the valiant commander of the place and exclaimed, "Je verrai Pondicherry en ruines, mais je ne cederai jamais!" Soon discovering his mistake, however, he put up his sword, and the frigate escaped unharmed, but the determined ferocity of the officer no doubt reached the ears of BISMARCK, and induced him to give up as hopeless so daring a purpose as that of obtaining possession of Pondicherry.

THE FINE ARTS.

Second Notice of the National Academy Exhibition—"Mount Philip"—Sale of Valuable Works of Art.

We continue our notice of the exhibition now open at the Academy of Design. We are pleased to find that the exhibition has attracted more attention than any previous one, and that the number of visitors largely exceeds that of last year. There is no doubt, we believe, that a rapidly-growing taste for art exists in this community, and we can only hope that it will be fostered, and not allowed to languish.

SOUTH ROOM.

"In the Sierra Nevada Mountains," (No. 250,) by ALBERT BIERSTADT, is superior to the work by which he was represented in the Academy exhibition last year, inasmuch as it is more truthful. The scene chosen for representation by Mr. BIERSTADT is a grand and imposing one. The rocks on the right, and the group of trees on the left, with the green water swirling beneath them, are painted with remarkable skill, but it may well be doubted whether water ever displayed such hues as Mr. BIERSTADT's does, at least under such a sky; nor do rocks, even in the Sierra Nevada range, look so much like icebergs as those the artist has depicted here. While paying all due homage to Mr. BIERSTADT's vivid imagination, and his unquestioned technical skill, we cannot give unqualified admiration to what we know cannot be true. A fine contrast to this picture is afforded by Mr. WILLIAM HART's "Golden Hour," (No. 299.) We have referred to this production of Mr. HART's more than once, but since its return from the Chicago exhibition the artist has done much work upon it. The foliage has been elaborated, and the sky strengthened, and it must now unquestionably take rank as the finest landscape in the gallery. It may perhaps be objected that it is rather too yellow in tone, that sunlight never has that golden hue that Mr. HART has given it, but the color is so rich, the picture so glows and flashes with light, the shadows are so deep and cool, the aerial perspective so admirably managed, the details so carefully drawn, and the whole composition so full of feeling, that any short-comings are swallowed up in its great and most evident merits. That the public fully appreciate it is evinced by the fact that a circle of admirers is invariably to be found in front of it. No. 258, "Lake George," by DAVID JOHNSON, shows a great advance on any of Mr. JOHNSON's previous efforts. Here we have an atmosphere, (totally wanting in this artist's earliest pictures,) and a most careful study of the forms and colors of nature. The sky is very fine; the water is, however, rather too metallic. From Mr. ARTHUR PARTON, a young and most promising artist, we find "Glencoe," (No. 253,) a Highland scene, of course. This work shows a wonderful advance on the part of this artist. The foreground (we except that on the left) is most charmingly rendered and serves as a fitting introduction to the subtle beauty of the mountain background, and sky. The left of the picture is too much broken up, and the water is rather hard and painty. No. 269, "Fishing-Boats on the Adriatic," by S. R. GIFFORD, is a brilliant piece of color. Mr. D. R. KNIGHT, of Philadelphia, is represented by "Othello at the House of Brabantio," (No. 251.) It is somewhat conventional in treatment, and judging from the countenances of the fair Desdemona and the swarthy Moor, Mr. KNIGHT's imagination is not of a high order. The lady is by no means pretty, though her pose is simple and graceful, and her expression truthful. The noble Moor looks more like a groom than a great General. Such a man never mounted "the imminent deadly breach," unless indeed his soldiers pushed him up, nor could Desdemona have loved him for the dangers he had passed. He is in fact a very mean figure indeed. Pages, too, as Mr. KNIGHT probably knows, do not usually play harps close to their master's ears while he is listening to the discourse of an honored guest. The drawing is sufficiently correct and the color rich and truthful. "The Old Stage-Coach," (No. 274.) by EASTMAN JOHNSON, we have heretofore noticed at length. Mr. GEO. H. HALL's "Spanish Peasants," (No. 295.) is neither better nor worse than usual. But to return to the Landscapes: No. 256, "Sunday in Devonshire," by A. F. BELLOWS, is by far the best specimen of oil-painting we have seen from this artist. It has not the strength nor the subtle beauty of light and shade of his water-colors, but it will not be long, we think, before Mr. BELLOWS will reach the standard set by himself. Charming as the picture is, in many respects, it is undeniably weak in color. The foliage, too, is not studied with that care which Mr. BELLOWS' water-color drawings invariably exhibit. Mr. JAMES M. HART's "Winter on the Adirondacks" is a remarkably careful study of mountain scenery, when partially clothed in snow. The peculiar color of melting snow, when the hue of the ground beneath is seen through it, has been very truthfully rendered. In many respects this is the best work Mr. HART has yet done. We feel the grandeur and solemnity of the "everlasting hills," and we admire the painstaking care with which the artist has given every detail, but we nevertheless think that a less brilliant sky, and greater attention to the massing of color in the landscape would have added to the effect of the picture. No 265, "The New-England Farm," by A. D. SHATTUCK, is most carefully and conscientiously worked up. The foreground and foliage are particularly good. The background is a little too strong, and the effect of bright sunlight might have been given with more effect. Nevertheless, it is a pleasing and valuable work.

Leaving this gallery for the present, we will pass on to the EAST ROOM.

One of the most noticeable pictures here is Mr. GEO. H. BOUGHTON's "Last Rose of Summer," (209.) It is one of the most charming works we have seen from Mr. BOUGHTON, and is evidently painted with more than usual care. It represents a lady, young and pretty, habited in a brown velvet suit, standing in front of a garden seat, and looking, with a face full of sadness and sweetness, at the rose lying at her feet. There are few modern painters who can put more in a few inches of canvas than Mr. BOUGHTON. This composition, simple and unpretending as it is, is, to our thinking, the gem of the collection.

Nearly opposite this hangs another fine painting, "Burning Whalers off the Island of Ascension," by ALBERT BIERSTADT, (No. 234.) Two burning ships are seen in the middle distance, while around them glares the reflected light from the flames, and above floats a dense canopy of smoke. In the foreground, painted with all Mr. BIERSTADT's usual skill, are boats putting off to the ships. A strong contrast is afforded between the glowing light from the two vessels, and the cold, silvery beams of the just risen moon. This is a composition worthy of Mr. BIERSTADT, and with more power and truth in it than there are in his more pretentious picture already referred to.

HEAD OF CHRIST BY PAGE.

Anything that comes from the hands of so eminent an artist as Mr. PAGE is worthy of more than passing notice. On one or two occasions Mr. PAGE has been accused, in striving after originality, of overstepping the bounds of artistic license. In the picture now on exhibition at the Academy of Design, his love of originality has certainly betrayed him into the production of what may almost be termed a monstrosity. Mr. PAGE, it is said, has been at work on this painting for over two years, and he has apparently mused over it so long that it has grown into a sort of Frankenstein beneath its creator's hands. It seems to us that the production of such a work, by such an artist, can only be accounted for by supposing him to have set out with the determination to discard all previously conceived ideas of the material form of our Savior, and to evolve one purely out of his "inner consciousness," which should be unlike all others. A very much greater artist than Mr. PAGE might well have failed in the attempt. We know how impossible it is for any mortal hand to portray a head of Christ, which shall in all things be satisfactory. The meekness, the purity, the devotion, the courage, the fervor, the dignity of Christ's character, cannot be put on canvas. But we may at least look for its two leading traits, meekness and purity. In Mr. PAGE's Christ we find neither of these. His idea of the "Lamb of God," as represented in the picture under consideration, is a sturdy young Jew, and that not of the pure but the mixed race, with a rather broad face, low forehead, remarkably prominent eyes, thick nose, and the lips of a Bacchanal. The contrast between the purplish red of the lips, and the reddish yellow of the beard, is alone sufficient to render the picture repulsive. Instead of the meek, the pure and lowly Jesus, the consoler and the comforter, we have here a stout young fellow who appears to have just risen from a good dinner, at which, judging from his flushed cheeks and glaring eyes, he has been indulging rather too freely. We have remarked that the face is not that of the pure Jewish type. The descendants of pure Jews, who are now only to be found in Jerusalem, are not distinguished by thick lips and noses. These are types of the mixed race. Why, therefore, Mr. PAGE should have thought it necessary to give his Christ these characteristics we are at a loss to understand. Perhaps it was because all other painters have avoided them, and Mr. PAGE was determined to be original. The picture is, to our thinking, positively repulsive; nor do we even accept the dictum we have heard concerning it that, "unsatisfactory as it may be, a great artist alone could have painted it." We believe that, did it not bear Mr. PAGE's signature, it would not attract a second thought from any one.

We have heretofore noticed Mr. E. W. PERRY's "Clock Doctor" and "Saturday Afternoon," (Nos. 197 and 244,) and we have only to repeat the commendation then bestowed on them. The first is, indeed, worthy of all praise for its truth of expression and admirable painting of details. No. 199, "The Reveille," by WM. MAGRATH, represents a wounded drummer-boy roused by the sound of the trumpet. The color seems cold and leaden. The landscape, however, is nicely painted, and the expression on the boy's face strong and truthful.

Mr. P. P. RYDER is represented by a strongly painted face of an "Italian Page," (No. 216.) This is a very careful study. Mr. H. P. GRAY has here a remarkably strong portrait of an old lady, (No. 230,) and Mrs. GRAY a very pleasing work, (No. 229,) which shows a great advance on her previous efforts. No. 238, by HENRY MOSLER, represents a very young lady and her grandpapa indulging in a game of "Cat's-cradle." The expression and attitudes are exceedingly good, those of the old gentleman being perhaps the best. The flesh coloring is also good, and the accessories painted with great care.

Next week we hope to give notices of the remaining pictures.

"MOUNT PHILIP."

Mr. H. W. ROBBINS' "Mount Philip, from the Farmington River," now on exhibition at GOUPIL's, shows a decided advance over anything yet done by this artist. We are sorry that it was not placed in the Academy. The foreground, with its rich foliage, is remarkably fine, and the water is well rendered. The painting of the sky, too, is deserving of commendation. But, like all Mr. ROBBINS' previous works that we have seen, the atmosphere is almost wanting. The extremity of the mountain could not possibly, on the very clearest day, appear as distinctly to the eye as that portion of it nearest to the spectator. Yet it does so in Mr. ROBBINS' picture.

IMPORTANT PICTURE SALE.

A valuable collection of pictures from the galleries of GOUPIL & Co. and JOHN SNEDECOR has been on exhibition at the Somerville Art Gallery during the week, and has necessarily attracted much attention. There are 171 pictures in all, comprising some remarkably fine specimens of the modern French, the Dusseldorf and the American schools. Among them we notice ROSA BONHEUR's "Highland Sheep," a strong and truthful rendering of Northern scenery and the animals accustomed to wander amid the bleak hills of old Scotland. The trim and dainty sheep which VERBOECKHOVEN loves to paint are not here, but in place of them we have strong-limbed and strong-visaged animals with the long and greasy wool peculiar to the Highland breed. A painting by this artist, just the size of this, was recently sold in London for 1,000 guineas. SCHREYER's "Gipsy Horse," a remarkable painting, and one of his best works, is also here, with some good examples of Bougereau, Diaz, Jules Breton, Seignac, Pecrus, Aufray, Emile Levy and Henriette Ronner. ALFRED STEVENS' "Watching the Butterflies," (No. 154,) is as fine an example of this artist's style as we have ever seen here. There are also two or three pictures by H. BARON, so fine in color, expression and general treatment that the wonder is such an artist is not better appreciated. The time is not far distant when his works will be eagerly sought after. A superb fancy portrait by JOURDAN, entitled "Reading the New Novel," and "The Picture Gallery," by CARL BECKER, of Berlin, are also worthy of notice. The latter is a superb composition, rich and truthful in color, and strong in expression. The attitudes of the principal figures, particularly that of the lady just entering the gallery, are charmingly graceful and natural. TISSOT's "The Abduction," is quite a curiosity in its way, showing both rare artistic talent and a singular disregard of artistic laws. Among the works of our own artists will be found a good specimen by GEO. H. BOUGHTON, in his "Daughter of Eve," and one of the strongest and best pictures Mr. SHATTUCK has yet painted. It is a view on the Hudson, with a pure silvery light thrown across the water, and falling on the foreground. Mr. F. H. DE HAAS has also here a small but remarkably good painting. Mr. BIERSTADT is represented by a castle on the Rhine, with a glowing sunset, and Mr. COLMAN by "The Regatta for the Queen's Cup," of which we have heretofore spoken in commendation.

The collection is one of the most valuable ever offered at public auction. The sale is advertised to take place on Tuesday and Wednesday evenings next.

THE WILD-BEAST MARKET.

How Young Lions are Reared—Where the Menageries Get their Stock—Experiences of a Wild-Beast Tamer—Tigers, Elephants and Giraffes—Their Cost and the Mode of Procuring Them—The Monkey Tribe—Tragic Tale of a Monkey Who Died from Excitement.

Has that eminent statistical personage who, under Government auspices, gives us yearly tabular statements of the horses, mules, oxen, cows and sheep raised in the country, ever presented to us the value and number of rare and strange beasts which are reared in our midst? If horses and cows, colts and calves have a market value, so have lions, tigers and their whelps, for whelps of both these families of carnivora are born in the United States every year. An advent of this kind is of course duly heralded by the public prints. No infant of Spain nor its royal mamma could receive greater attention. Daily bulletins are given to the anxious public, and general curiosity can hardly be satisfied. During the last four years some twelve little lions have seen the light, but only one-half of them have reached years of maturity.

Details of their nursing are peculiar. Mr. Chick's idea of the apparatus necessary to little Paul Dombey's nutrition, and that unfortunate suggestion "of doing something temporary with a tea-pot," would be equally out of place. The fond parent, in addition to the natural maternal solicitude, always combines her inherent natural ferocity. If at all times she is more dangerous than her royal consort, just then she is of an exceedingly jealous disposition, and any attempt at familiarity with her little darlings is followed by a leonine pat. We use the word pat in Mr. FRANK BUCKLAND's acceptation of the term, as expressing that peculiar side movement of the paw peculiar to the whole feline race. In the domestic cat it is just strong enough to knock over a rat, but with the lion it means the crushing of arm and leg-bones and the dislocation of the human frame generally. The lioness is not approached until the cubs are fully three or four months old. They are then carefully separated by stratagem, and their weaning commences. About a quart of milk is given per diem, with a small quantum of animal food in the way of nice juicy cutlets and tit-bits, all bone being carefully excluded. The seventh month seems to be one of trial. If they get over that they stand a fair chance of life, though the period of their tooth shedding, when they are a year old, is attended with danger. Dentistry being rather hazardous for the operator, they sometimes swallow their own teeth, which often kills them. It seems strange, but the litters born in traveling menageries appear to have the best chances of life. Of a large number of whelps bred in the London Zoological Gardens, most of the little things were born with some irregularity of the palatal bone, and the roof of the mouth being defective, the whelps could not suckle.

It is certain that lions attached to a traveling van, under proper care, are the most lively and healthy, and thrive better than those which are stationary. In the United States, a lion has been exhibited during a period of thirty-five years. As far as could be judged, he had been fifteen years before that in captivity, so he was certainly fifty and over when he died. The general disease which carries them off is congestion of the lungs. The amount of food given a lion is less than one would suppose. About thirteen pounds of beef per diem, with bones ad libitum, is a fair allowance. When fed regularly, they show little disposition to glut themselves, and will rarely exceed fifteen to sixteen pounds when given all they will eat. When horse-meat is procurable, they are fed in part with it. This cost of feeding is no small item, as it takes rather more to feed a lion than it does to feed a man. Great care is necessary in keeping their cages clean. As they are constantly shedding their hair, an accumulation of this adhering to their food, and being swallowed by them, is apt to sicken them. Occasionally, as did Mrs. Wackford Squeers, sulphur is sprinkled on their meat, and mild purgatives given them in their water. The largest proportion of these animals come from the French province of

NEWS OF THE DAY.

EUROPE.

The Army of Versailles have occupied St. Denis, and have cut off the railroad communication with Paris on the north. The representatives of the commerce and industry of Paris are to make a fresh effort to conciliate the opposing factions in France. Cannonading has ceased. The Commune is making immense preparations for defending the capital, in the way of embankments and barricades. The Versailles Army is, however, strongly posted. It is reported that the Germans will surrender the forts held by them to the Versailles troops to facilitate their operations. Serious dissensions are reported in the Commune, and its powers have been delegated to a committee of nine. Communication with the provinces is cut off. The town of Neuilly was set on fire by shells. The Communist General again claims a victory over his adversaries, though the latter are rapidly advancing.

The Princess LOUISE, accompanied by her husband, the Marquis of LORNE, has arrived at Florence.

GENERAL.

Chief-Justice JAMES B. MCKEAN will preside at the United States District Court at Salt Lake City on May 15. It is expected to be an exceedingly interesting term.

Four fishing schooners belonging to Gloucester, Mass., were probably lost with all hands, (forty men,) in the severe gale of the 2d inst., on the Banks. This makes a total of six vessels and sixty-three lives lost the present season.

The meeting of miners at Summit Hill, on Friday, resulted in a majority for local arbitration, but no change from last year's basis.

The English High Commission are anxiously awaiting advices from their Government concerning the propositions submitted for its sanction.

The receipts of fractional currency at Washington for the week amount to $742,500.

Another explosion of nitro-glycerine occurred at the Hoosac Tunnel, on Friday, killing four men—J. S. MASON, the Superintendent, WILLIAM DUNN, THOMAS RYECROFT, and ROBERT ROBERTS. Another man, named WILLIAM J. CHURCHILL, escaped with a broken leg.

A fire at Sedalia, Mo., has destroyed property valued at from $60,000 to $70,000.

The track is now being laid on the Northern Pacific Railroad at the rate of one mile per day, and over 3,000 men are employed in the construction of the work.

Col. WILLIAM JOHNSON, of Rockford, Ill., died very suddenly on Friday night, of asthma, at St. Paul, Minn.

The Elevated Railway, in this City, was sold yesterday by the Sheriff, to satisfy creditors.

A man named ARSON hung himself yesterday near Fort Dodge, Iowa.

The vicinity of Des Moines, Iowa, was visited by heavy frost on Friday night. There will be very little fruit in that section this year.

Gen. VALMASEDA is to go into active service after pacifying Sancti Spiritus." The troops have killed a Cuban officer and MIGUEL GERONIMO GUTIERREZ, the Vice-President of the Cuban Chamber. The insurgents remain on the eastern side of the military line.

The Legislative Republican Caucus Committee will meet at Albany on Friday next, to frame an address to the Republicans of the State. The Supply bill has not yet been signed, and the Governor having left the city it will not be signed until his return, next Tuesday.

State Senator HARPENDING has suffered a relapse, and was in a precarious condition last evening, at Albany.

O. H. PERRY, Esq., has been appointed by the Great Western Dispatch Company to succeed the late JAMES EDWARD GANSON, as their managing officer at Jersey City.

Yesterday the authorities of the First National Bank of Jersey City purchased twenty-year city bonds to the amount of $1,000,000. They were sold at par, with accrued interest from May 1.

A party of railroad officials and New-York business men made an excursion to New-Brunswick, yesterday, on one of the new Pullman drawing-room cars which are being placed on the road. The excursion was under the superintendence of Mr. G. W. BARKER, master of transportation.

Rev. Dr. MEIER SMITH, late rector of Trinity Church, at Newark, sailed for Europe yesterday in the steamer Rhein, of the Bremen line. Mlle. JANAUSCHEK sailed by the same vessel.

FLORA SMITH, claiming to be a resident of Philadelphia, was arrested at 7 o'clock last evening in the Bowery, where she was found grossly intoxicated. She was confined in a cell at the Eldridge-street Police Station. Soon after being locked up she was found hanging by the neck to the bars over the cell door. She was discovered and cut down by the doorman in time to save her life. She was attended by a surgeon and soon recovered.

The Duties of Wealth and Culture.

For many years the friends of republican institutions have been uttering words of warning about a certain menacing evil. The tendency among wealthy or educated men to withdraw from politics has been observed with apprehension, and its consequences have been frequently pointed out. Not only have intelligent and far-seeing Americans perceived and announced this danger, but well-wishers among foreigners, like the Frenchman, DE TOCQUEVILLE, and the Englishman, MILL, have dwelt upon it with earnestness and solicitude. These observers have felt how impossible it is for a Government to be better than those who make it; and have realized, as a consequence, that, in the measure wherein political power fell into the exclusive possession of the lower strata of society, corruption and weakness must surely ensue, and free institutions be proportionably endangered.

It is now pretty generally acknowledged that the peril so long dreaded, if not absolutely upon us, is close at hand. Matters have gone from bad to worse for a long time, at first by imperceptible degrees, but latterly with an acceleration that tells of approaching catastrophe. This remark, of course, refers to New-York; broadly and generally to her State Legislature, conspicuously and shamefully to her chief City. Few intelligent people, of whatever party, now deny that local misgovernment has reached a point altogether unparalleled in the history of the Republic, or that it forebodes results, as in those other republics of antiquity, which may prove destructive if not ruinous. This being the case, various suggestions are heard in the way of remedy. Some propose to simplify the political machinery; some to return to household suffrage; some, while leaving the vote to all who now possess it, to deny its future attainment to all who have not certain assigned qualifications. The danger that threatens us is partly measurable, in fact, by the animated discussion of the subject which is heard in nearly every intelligent circle. When such a discussion has become all but universal, it is clear that it is no longer thought to be merely academical, but that it has assumed a practical importance.

Now, whether we are to go back and undo what was done in 1846 or not, whether we are to remove things old or to devise things new, there is one truth about which there can be no dispute; and it is, that just so surely as present mischiefs have sprung in a great degree from the withdrawal from political duty of the wealthy and cultivated classes, so surely must the remedy spring from their return to it. The men of property and the men of thought must set themselves to the work done by their fathers one or two generations ago. They must take an active and persistent share in legislation. They must give time and money to the work, employing both in such ways as wisdom may suggest. As to what those ways shall be, opinions, of course, may differ. But there can be no difference as to the imperative need for action. The personal labor and influence of the affluent and educated classes is the true motive power to bring about reform; and without this there is no panacea or specific by which reform can be brought about. To get the best attainable Government we must have the help of the best people in the community.

This help may be given in various forms. The regular exercise of the suffrage should, of course, be one of them. The promotion of intelligent debate, the dissemination of healthy moral and political truths, the education, in a word, of the masses, is another. When every man of brains and substance makes up his mind to do his utmost for the good end, that end will not be long postponed. The very fact that such a movement, or concerted series of movements, had been determined upon by our first merchants, lawyers, bankers and other leading citizens, and would be pushed resolutely to conclusions, would be equivalent to almost half the battle. And herein, we repeat, is our only safety and remedy; nostrums and palliatives without end may be prescribed, but the only true cure for our political disease is the restoration of those elements of health the withdrawal of which rendered the disease possible.

"Fashionable" Reporting.

Dr. JOHNSON advised the man who would write idiomatic English, to give his days and his nights to the volumes of ADDISON. We counsel any student in search of the newest and most ornamental terms of expression that have been contrived in these later days to glance, now and again, at the productions of the "fashionable" reporter of the period. He may be quite prepared to find that, in the world whose doings are chronicled in a dialect specially adapted to it, people do not give a breakfast, but a petite (sic) dejeuner. It will, however, be somewhat of a revelation to the diligent inquirer to be informed that a ball may be a "capping climax" and a "culmination." That a supper should have been "irreproachable" was doubtless highly satisfactory to all parties concerned, but that its "fairy arrangement" was "the source of comment and appreciation" is, as a piece of information, rather more novel than intelligible. In the brilliant circles whose mysteries the dazzled Bohemian reveals to us in language so appropriate, people do not merely enjoy themselves—they "surrender themselves to every social enjoyment and genial intercourse, and make the best possible use of the fleeting and pleasure-tinted moments." Young ladies do not return to society—they make a renewed "advent" there, and as no genteel company could be expected to sit down to supper and eat it, they are said to "file in to the tables and enjoy the marvels of cuisine there displayed." A careful collation of numerous examples has utterly failed to throw any light upon the inscrutable partiality of the fashionable reporter for the word recherché. It does duty here to a "reception" and there to a "gathering," now to a dress and anon to a dinner, and in every case appears to have a meaning known only to the writer.

We presume there are people who read the stuff provided by sundry newspapers, under the designation of "fashionable gossip," or some similar title. It is also conceivable that there are people who find unalloyed pleasure in having their dress, their equipage, or their entertainments, descanted upon in the marvelous dialect of the Bohemian turned flunkey. But we should imagine that the first impulse of most of the victims of this kind of publicity would be to "dissemble his love" by kicking the fashionable newsmonger down-stairs. The important announcement that a gentleman, who is named, "does not contemplate a dejeuner shortly, as was stated by a contemporary," may possibly have emanated from the gentleman himself; while the intelligence that a certain lady's "robe en train" did not cost five hundred dollars, as previously stated, but five thousand five hundred, was probably obtained from the dress-maker whose name is appended to the news. But there is internal evidence of a man being compelled to draw upon his imagination for his facts when "the writer closes this brief but inadequate account with the hope that in our next edition permission will have been obtained to give our readers in detail some of the marked and attractive features of the affair, with, perhaps, the names of the guests." The touching ingenuousness of this appeal is only equaled by the impressive candor with which another member of the same literary guild makes the admission: "I confess to a weakness for a handsome woman of middle age." The same hand reappears in a master touch concerning the "courtly mother and ponderous father" of one of our fashionable youth, and in the delicate intimation that "wine flowed in awful quantities, and jellies disappeared with astonishing rapidity."

But to find the fashionable reporter in the plenitude of his powers, and the full luxuriance of his style, we must follow him to scenes where he is received as a welcome guest, and where "the marked courtesies received on all hands" lend wings to his fancy and vigor to his pen. Then the place of the festivity becomes "palatial," and the occasion generally "goes far in advance of any yet enjoyed." Then the music wafts "airy notes," and the supper becomes "an epicure's dream," and in "novelty of design and lusciousness of taste" defies competition. It likewise has the mysterious effect of "reinvesting the tired energies of those who partook," a statement the ambiguity of which is in no way improved by a reference to the fact that "a number of handsome gentlemen were present, in fact they were in excess"—a rare occurrence. The number of ladies who are "charming," "fascinating," "sparkling," "vivacious," "graceful," "delightful," and who "form the cynosure of all eyes" on such occasions, becomes perfectly bewildering. As a fitting termination to the report of the "brilliant scene," we are reminded that "considerations of expense are really of no consequence in this connection," while a delicious touch of fastidiousness gets somehow into the mind of the delighted Bohemian, who, for this occasion only, appears as an "envoy extraordinaire," and who makes his bow with the remark, "A timely suggestion to restrict the invitations might not be inappropriate." Curiously enough, this is precisely the remark that a judicious reader would be disposed to make after giving due attention to the revelations of the literature of the back stairs.

A Costly Prison System.

We find, among the papers which lend interest to the last report of the Prison Association, a remarkable review of the financial and moral administration of the State prisons of New-York under the present Constitution. This paper, which purports to emanate from the Association Prison Discipline Committee, and is signed by thirteen of our foremost citizens, is in the form of a memorial addressed to Gov. HOFFMAN. Thus indorsed and addressed, the document must be presumed to be as truthful as it is plain-spoken.

The objective point of this review is the existing system of prison government by State Inspectors, against which an imposing array of argument and figures is brought to bear with considerable force. It is represented that the Inspectors are de facto governors of the prisons and controllers of the system, while themselves independent of all supervision, and almost relieved from responsibility. The office is essentially political, and every year one member of the Board is brought in fresh from the arena of party politics. In the gift of these Inspectors is the appointment of some two hundred prison officials, from Wardens down to watchmen, whose combined salaries are not far from $220,000 per annum. Of course, this is an amount of "patronage" which must inevitably become, and remain, attractive to politicians, and, in effect, place the prisons in the hands of new keepers whenever the political balance of power changes among the Inspectors. This is liable to occur every two years, and latterly has so occurred quite frequently. All this involves political jobbery, favoritism, loose administration, and financial irregularities.

It is upon the financial phase of the question that the report first challenges our attention. We cannot be mistaken in accrediting Judge EDMONDS with a large share in the marshaling of the host of figures. We infer his authorship of this part of the document from the two facts, that his name appears at the head of the Committee signing it, and that a practical experience, as a former Warden of Sing Sing Prison has enabled him to speak ex cathedrâ, as it were, upon the subject in hand. In illustration of the financial demoralization which has become chronic in the prison management of the State, twelve distinct tables are given, which present the matter in so many different lights before the public.

In 1848, when the present system was introduced, the State prisons contained 1,342 convicts: in 1869 the number was 2,932, an increase of 119 per cent. The expenditures in 1843 were $217,491 52: in 1869 they were $879,219 26, an increase of over three hundred per cent. The cost of keeping 1,421 prisoners in 1847 was $88 55 per head; in 1857, when there were 1,890 prisoners, the expense was $112 54, and, in 1867, 2,920 prisoners cost $266 98 each. In 1857 and 1865, the number averaging about the same, the cost was respectively $112 54 and $220. These statements are taken from the Inspectors' reports. As to the matter of deficiencies between total earnings and expenditures, it is stated that in 1847 the deficiency was $20,462 88, and in 1868, $242,724 88. The aggregate deficit in twenty-three years (given by the tables in detail) is $1,997,084 45. The appropriations made by the Legislature for the prisons, from 1848 to 1870, have aggregated over ten million dollars, an average of some $435,000 per annum. But these appropriations have largely increased of late years. Meanwhile, the allowance made to the inspectors for traveling expenses has grown inordinately. Even since 1866 it has increased from $1,415 03 to $4,177 33 in 1870. Very pertinent is the question asked by these reviewers: "Did the inspectors travel three times as much in 1869 as they did in 1865, or had traveling become three times as expensive in that interval?" Moreover, the salaries of officers paid by the Inspectors have increased from $75,000 in 1847 to $220,000 in 1869; so that, while the number of prisoners has increased about 119 per cent., the salaries have increased about 200 per cent.

With regard to the earnings of convicts paid into the Treasury during the existence of the present system, it is stated that they amount to $4,170,554 11, which, deducted from the $10,000,000 appropriated to the prisons in that time, leaves a balance of some $6,000,000 to represent the cost of these institutions to the State during the twenty-three years. In the ventilation of this branch of the subject, the report adds the curious statement that, "deducting the amount paid in for 'earnings' from the amount reported by the Inspectors as 'earnings,' there appears a deficiency during the same period of $679,743 92 for earnings unaccounted for." This statement is illustrated, in part, by a table, which fastens $204,000 of this deficiency upon the two years, 1860 and 1861, and $263,000 upon the years 1868 and 1869. Within the past five years the expenses of the prisons have been $1,094,151 05 in excess of the earnings—an amount larger than the deficiencies of the whole previous eighteen years; and the appropriations from the State Treasury have been $4,193,760 07, being about equal to the appropriations for all those previous years!

Under this exhibit it would seem as if the prison reformers have good ground for urging some radical change in the system of prison administration. The remedy proposed is an amendment to the Constitution, the main point of which is the appointment of a board of five managers of prisons, to hold office for ten years, and who shall have power to appoint only the four principal officers for each prison, and to remove them "for cause." All the subordinate officers are to be selected by the Warden of each prison. By thus getting the prisons out of politics, it is hoped that present abuses will be reformed.

Science in Crime.

For some years past there has been an incessant contest for superiority between the manufacturers and inventors of offensive and defensive weapons of warfare, with an ever-varying change of fortune. At one moment the defense seems to have won the victory, but while they are exulting in the fancied security of their seven-fold mail, presto! a new gun is invented that sends a ball crashing through their iron plates as though they were so much paper. Then new and tougher plates are added, and other projectiles brought out, and so the unending strife goes on. At present it is hard to say which has the advantage. The whimsical parody of this combat on that other warfare which dishonesty wages against respectable prosperity, leaves room for no such doubt. As between the burglars and the safe-makers, for example, the superiority is indisputably on the side of the rogues. According to the Scientific American it is now impossible to construct a burglar-proof safe. The thief, discarding all such vulgar and obsolete instrumentalities as jimmy and jackscrew, cold chisel and gunpowder, provides himself with a simple adaptation of the oxyhydrogen blow-pipe, and in a second or two, burns his way through the hardest metal without exertion and without noise. We have not yet heard that this appliance of the laboratory has yet been borrowed by any erudite burglar, but the thing seems feasible enough, and no doubt the craft will be heartily thankful for, and make speedy use of, the admirable suggestion.

Indeed, there are few things more remarkable in modern crime than the intelligence and success with which the resources of science have been applied to pursuits of guilt. Violence in robbery is no longer resorted to by any but the most bungling tyros. The garroter does not now attempt to throttle or stun his victim. He finds that the chloroformed handkerchief does his work more neatly and effectually than fist or bludgeon. The business of counterfeiting bank notes and altering checks has been raised to the dignity of a fine art, wherein the recent appliances of chemistry and photography are exhausted. Instead of painfully erasing by hand the words or figures to be changed, an acid has been found to remove them so deftly as to leave no trace that the paper had ever been written on. Every device has been tried to baffle the counterfeiter, without avail. Paper has been used of a peculiar composition and pattern; intricate scroll-work has been traced on it, by the aid of complicate machinery, in ink which it has been supposed impossible to imitate or photograph. Yet, although the secret of these imaginary safeguards has been kept with the strictest fidelity, the issue of the inimitable notes is sure to be followed in a month or so by counterfeits, often so exact as to be with difficulty, even by experts, told from the original.

So far it seems as though the ingenuity of crime had fairly outstripped the ingenuity of prevention. Perhaps the day may come when Fagin's school of pickpockets will be elevated into a college of scientific pillage, with learned professors to impart all the latest discoveries in natural philosophy to eager pupils. In the meantime, it would be well if the wise men put their heads together to devise a way to supply virtue with weapons as effective as those of vice. It is better, perhaps, to be robbed scientifically, if one must be robbed; but most people would prefer not to be robbed at all with an exception, of course, in favor of Boss TWEED.

The Young Men's Christian Association.

The eighteenth annual report of the Young Men's Christian Association has just been published, and on every page of it may be found evidence of the thoroughness and liberal spirit with which a noble work has been performed during the past year. The Association now numbers 6,269 members, of whom 3,521 have been admitted since the last report. An idea of the energy and extensiveness of the Association may be formed from the number of its committees, and the variety of their labors. In its several departments of aggressive work, some forty-four committees, having from one to one hundred and three members each, are constantly employed under a system of subdivided labor. Several of these committees perform service which no mere money consideration could inspire. The Association, with its three branches and its six thousand members all fully equipped, and, so far as the central body is concerned, magnificently endowed and appointed, is, as we believe, doing a more permanently effectual work for the benefit of our young men than many of the churches in New-York. By appealing to their sympathies, and linking them in chains of confidence and friendship, the institution brings thousands under its beneficent influence, and trains them for useful citizenship. A large proportion of those thus acted upon are of a class not accessible by any other means. Nor can it be expected that young men are to be drawn away from seductive vice, except by processes which will make virtue equally attractive and pleasurable. Such processes are not within the object or power of the ecclesiastical organizations, but are amply provided for under the working economy of such a society as this. Their results tend to the benefit and growth of the Church, and thus there can be no collision nor competition between the two. But outside of all religious considerations, the Young Men's Christian Association has done much for our City, and is capable of doing a great deal more.

MINOR TOPICS.

Perhaps the surest indication we can have of the approaching triumph of the Versailles troops over the Paris insurgents is, that the Prussians have begun to evacuate the forts around the city. The delay of the forces under MCMAHON in making the long-expected general attack upon the Communists, together with the rather indecisive nature of late engagements, might lead to the conclusion that the "Reds" had, after all, a chance of triumph. But it is perfectly clear that the Germans, who are the best possible judges of the relative strength of the combatants, have no such belief. The supremacy of the Communists would involve the dissolution of the Assembly, with whom the terms of peace were concluded, and there would be no authority left in France directly responsible for the payment of the indemnity. The Germans would certainly not abandon the pledges they hold in St. Denis and Charenton for the fulfillment of their bargain, if they apprehended such a result.

The late systematic raids of the Police upon some of the vilest nurseries of crime in this City are deserving of hearty approbation. The only element wanting to make them completely satisfactory is that they should be distributed rather more impartially. If the Keno dens of the lower class of gamblers are pounced upon, why not the gilded halls further up-town, where wealthy players pursue equally illegal pastimes? If the corruption of the Chatham-street cellars is to be dragged, as it was last evening, into the light of day, why not the equally notorious haunts of up-town debauchery? Were the present course of action to be consistently pursued, the yearly incomes of sundry Aldermen and City officials might be seriously diminished; but then the amended charter makes our real rulers as independent of the Common Council as of the electors, and if they really mean to weed out the infamous houses of the City, they could not have a better opportunity for attempting it. The public may be excused a good deal of incredulity as to the honesty of their preventive measures till they give evidence of greater thoroughness.

An admirer of Senator "MIKE" NORTON, rejoicing in the name of QUINN, got into the custody of the Police at Yonkers, as the result of an endeavor to combine business with pleasure. This enterprising adherent of the "Thunderbolt" having entered an office in the quiet town on the Hudson, found himself in proximity to a safe with no visible guardian. He was seized by an irrepressible professional desire to examine it more closely, and while engaged in the attempt to "convey" some of its contents, was, unfortunately, arrested. This industrious citizen of the Ninth Ward really deserves our heart-felt commiseration. Up at Albany a score or two of legislators had been accessories for several months past to repeated robberies of public money, and were even then departing to their homes all in perfect safety, and, in some cases, laden with honors, while this ill-starred QUINN, having merely adopted a more open and straightforward kind of burglary, finds himself in imminent danger of the State Prison. We trust that it is not Utopian to look forward to the time when the scoundrels who put their hands so frequently in the public safe may, also, get their term of Sing Sing.

We have reached the beginning of the end of the coal strikes. A number of German miners have resumed work under the guaranteed protection of the operators, and so confident are the authorities that all danger of a renewal of organized rioting has passed, that the last of the State troops are about to withdraw from the Scranton Valley. There are, beyond any doubt, hundreds of men who would willingly resume work, but for the terrorism exercised by the majority of the Workmen's Benevolent Association. Now that the hard and fast line of enforced submission has been broken through, we may expect to see the strike cease to be general and gradually drop out of sight altogether, from sheer lack of adhesion. It is to be regretted that so costly a dispute should have so inconclusive a termination. The same causes that produced the late struggle are ready to operate again as soon as a favorable opportunity presents itself—the well-meant action of Gov. GEARY against the transportation companies, notwithstanding.

Mr. B. F. PEIXOTTO, of California, the recently appointed United States Consul at Bucharest, sends to the Jewish Messenger the conclusions reached after two months' stay in Roumania, with regard to the persecution of his brother Israelites in that country. He states that the persecution, of whose details somewhat exaggerated accounts were transmitted several months ago, still continues; that it is systematic, and is fostered by trade jealousies and the political chicanery of demagogues, who take this cheap method of obtaining popularity. The new Constitution declares that no Israelite can become a citizen; and a still later project introduced into the popular Assembly aims at excluding all Jews from obtaining contracts for public works, from residing anywhere but in the towns, and from enjoying the benefits of education in their own faith. Mr. PEIXOTTO has learned enough since his arrival to make him "dread to know more." The state of affairs in Roumania fully justifies the object aimed at by the President's selection of a Jewish representative at Bucharest, and there is some reason to hope that his position there as an United States official may tend to mitigate the evils which threaten the members of his race in the principality of CHARLES of Hohenzollern.

Buenos Ayres, the chief city of the Argentine Confederation, suffers from a scourge more terrible than war. Yellow fever, of the most deadly type, is carrying off its population by hundreds every day. Men who would probably face a shower of bullets without flinching turn cowards before the terrible malady, family ties are unheeded and the sufferers are left to die untended and are only buried out of sight in obedience to an instinct of self-preservation. It is satisfactory to learn that the American residents have not yielded to the panic of the Spanish-Indian natives. The cause of the pestilence is the old story of neglected drainage and a consequently poisoned atmosphere.

We are reminded of the very respectable age of the American Press by the lately-announced death of Mr. JOHN SAXTON, of Canton, Ohio. The Ohio Repository, which he established in 1814, is greatly exceeded in age by sundry New-England journals. But it certainly stands alone in having been managed for fifty-seven years by its founder. The man who could, as Mr. SAXTON did, reproduce from his files of fifty-five years ago, the account of the surrender of the first NAPOLEON at Waterloo, as a companion picture to the surrender of the third NAPOLEON at Sedan, was not only the veteran of the American Press, but a link between two great historical eras, and an emphatic reminder of how fast the world travels.

AMUSEMENTS.

Theatrical and Musical.

RECORD OF THE WEEK.

With the exception of "Pluck," brought out on Monday at the theatre of Miss EDWIN, no theatrical novelty has claimed attention during the past few days at our hands. "Pluck" is sad trash; but it has been neatly put on the stage, and, with careful acting and some compression, it has apparently not been unsatisfactory to its public during the week. Mr. BOOTH has been playing Richelieu with capital results, and, his engagements elsewhere demanding attention, his brilliant series of performances was yesterday brought to a close. To-morrow the doors of his theatre are shut to the public, a night rehearsal of the "Winter's Tale"—in which Mr. BARRETT is to act Leontes, Mr. MARK SMITH Autolycus, and Mrs. MOLLENHAUER Hermione—being thought requisite to give that play due effect on its production on Tuesday. At the Fifth-avenue, Mr. CHARLES MATHEWS has continued to repeat his delightful embodiment of Mopus, and his surprising but less charming personation of Capt. Patter. The bill is changed to-morrow, when "The Critic" and "A Thousand a Year" will be seen. A thronged and fashionable house will assemble, we may be sure, to greet the occasion. A succession of excellent houses has rewarded Mr. WALLACK'S enterprise in bringing out "The Liar," and that gentleman's Young Widing has greatly improved since the first representation of it. FOOTE'S comedy is to be repeated to-morrow, with "The Nervous Man." Mr. NEIL WARNER has been substituted for Mr. JAMES BENNETT as Richard III. at Niblo's, and CIBBER'S adaptation has been played during the week in place of the original text. Both changes have been found acceptable by the audience. Mr. DALY'S "Horizon," like most things of Mr. DALY'S, has been lively and prosperous through the week at the Olympic. Miss AGNES ETHEL has reigned the "bright particular star" among the ladies here, and Mr. FOX has been comical to the most exasperating degree in the speculative Congressman.

ENGAGEMENTS IN EUROPE.

We are advised of the engagement, by Mr. FREDERICK RULLMANN, now in Europe, of Mme. FABRI-MULDER, soprano, of Mr. MULLER, baritone, of Mr. DALLISTER, basso, and of a juvenile prima-donna reputed to be possessed of a wonderful voice, and known as Miss ELTEN. These artists are to sing in concerts, whereof the celebrated female orchestra from Vienna will be the novel feature, and, consequently, the special attraction. Mme. FABRI-MULDER will be remembered here as the leading artist, with Signor STIGELLI, now dead, during a season of Italian opera held at the Winter Garden, many or ten years ago.

READING BY MRS. LEON OWENS.

Mrs. LEON OWENS, whose clever book, The English Governess at the Court of Siam, has been widely appreciated, gave a private reading on Friday last, to a circle of friends, at the rooms of Mrs. E. L. YOUMANS. The matter read consisted of selections from unpublished manuscripts, detailing other and highly-interesting experiences in Siam, and which will, we presume, make their way before long into print. Mrs. LEON OWENS is a lady of uncommon culture and talent, and might find it profitable, as such is so marked a custom of the day, to repeat and extend her reading before a public audience.

AID FOR THE CHAPIN HOME.

We are requested to notify the public that the amateur performance to be given at the Fourteenth-street Theatre in aid of the fund of the Chapin Home will occur on Wednesday evening next, instead of Wednesday afternoon.

Home Notes.

Miss NILSSON sang last night and sings to-morrow in Charleston....Mr. LINGARD and his company act in Elmira on Friday next....Monday Miss LUCILLE WESTERN plays in Elmira.... The Globe Theatre, in Boston, will be occupied, it seems, during nearly the whole of the Summer vacation. JOHN BROUGHAM begins a three weeks' engagement on June 12. Mr. O. B. DOUD will appear in "Across the Continent" for two weeks, beginning on July 3, and after that DAN BRYANT'S minstrels begin a season....Mr. JEFFERSON acted last week at the Holiday-street Theatre in Baltimore....The Richings Opera Troupe was last week in Louisville....The Wyndham Comedy Troupe was at the St. Louis Olympic last week....Mme. MARIE METHUA SCHELLER was at DeBar's Opera-house, in St. Louis, last week....Mr. MCVICKER'S theatre, in Chicago, will cease to exist in its present shape at the close of Miss LOTTA'S engagement. It will then be either completely altered, enlarged and improved, or will be converted into business purposes. In the latter case, Mr. MCVICKER will proceed immediately to the erection of another theatre, on Wabash-avenue, which will be one of the handsomest structures of its nature in the country. ....The Boston Daily Advertiser writes thus of the approaching Handel and Hadyn Triennial Festival: "The second regular triennial festival of the Handel and Hadyn Society is to begin in the Music Hall on the 9th of next month, and to continue for nearly a week. The programme has been announced, and most of our readers already know that the "Hymn of Praise," and the "Elijah" of MENDELSSOHN will be performed, together with the "Messiah" and "Israel in Egypt" of HANDEL, the "Ninth Symphony" of BEETHOVEN, the "Woman of Samaria" of STERNDALE BENNETT, NICOLAI'S "Festival Overture," and selections from the St. Matthew Passion Music of BACH. Engagements have been made with Mme. RUDERSDORFF and Mr. CUMMINGS, who occupy high positions among the great London artists; and the oratorio quartet will be completed by Miss PHILLIPS and Mr. M. W. WHITNEY, the two first American singers of the present day. A grand orchestra of one hundred instrumental performers is to take part, and symphony concerts are to be given on each afternoon of the festival week. The active members of the Society now number upward of seven hundred, and no assistance from without will be required this year for the performance of the choral music of the great masters. All the immense detail connected with the projection and perfection of the enterprise, including the subscription of the necessary guarantee fund, has been quietly attended to, and, without the sound of ax or hammer, as it were, the solid foundation has been laid upon which a noble temple of musical art is to be erected."....A New-Orleans newspaper prints the item following: "ANDY PARLE, of Parle's saloon, has in his possession an old and quaint relic of the past, in the shape of a poster of the Boston Theatre, the get-up of which brings us back to Confederate days, when every available piece of clean paper was used for printing purposes. The poster is printed on a sheet of brown paper, 14 by 19 inches, and is as follows:

BOSTON THEATRE.
(Opened Feb. 3, 1794.)
On Friday, February seventh, [1794]
—(For the last time,) to accommodate our country brethren—
Will be performed the TRAGEDY of
GUSTAVUS VASA, [Richtson]:
Or, the Deliverer of his Country [Sweden].
All the Characters (being the third time they were ever performed by the present Company) will be personated by Messrs. Baker, Jones, Collins, Bartley, (Chas. Stuart), Powell [Manager], S. Powell, and Kenny; Miss Harrison, Mrs. Jones, Mrs. Baker, and the child by Miss Cordelia.

The words and figures between brackets are written in ink, probably by the collector, whose thoughtfulness has handed down to posterity this relic of the last century. Unlike many old documents of the kind, the type and printing of this bill are very good."....Mlle. MORLACHI is about to dance in Omaha City....Mr. EDWIN ADAMS acts in Omaha City to-morrow...."Miss NILSSON," says the Richmond Inquirer, sings "like the Minus Polyglothus." The same authority notes that BRIGNOLI'S voice is full of a pathos; "indeed," it adds, "he is a highly respectable singer"....To-morrow night Mrs. E. L. DAVENPORT will benefit by a performance at the Chestnut-street Theatre, in Philadelphia....Mr. JAMES M. WEHLI played in Boston last week.... Miss LYDIA THOMPSON has been enthusiastically welcomed back to New-Orleans....Mr. APPY, the well-known violinist, is giving a series of concerts throughout the country, with Mr. WILLIAM MACDONALD, tenor; Mr. HALL, baritone, and Miss BENSLEY, soprano. It is averred that Miss BENSLEY'S voice reaches the C one octave above that note in altissimo....Mr. COLES, an English low comedian, has made a successful debut at the Chestnut-street Theatre, in Philadelphia....Mme. NADDI has profited by a tremendously remunerative benefit night in New-Orleans.

Foreign Notes.

At the inauguration of the Royal Albert Hall, in London, the copies of the music used by the singers and players, instead of being written by the old mode of taking out the parts of scores, were first photographed, then laid down on stone to be lithographed. The printer, Mr. E. J. FRANCIS, was thus enabled to supply promptly the large number of copies required. ....The Alfred Theatre reopens under the direction of Mrs. CHARLES HARCOURT, with a performance of "The Colleen Bawn" and the "Black-eyed Susan" burlesque....Mr. SOTHERN has been playing at the Theatre Royal, Bath, in Mr. BYRON'S new comedy, "An English Gentleman."....Mr. BURKLAND'S burlesque, "Black-eyed Susan," has been transferred from the Surrey Theatre to the Standard, Miss OLIVER and Mr. DEWAR still playing their original parts of Susan and Capt. Crosstree....Mr. ALFRED WIGAN will reappear at the Gaiety Theatre, in "The First Night." A new ballet, entitled "Rosalie," for which Messrs. PAYNE, the pantomimists, have been engaged, will also be given....The operatic season at the Gaiety had commenced this evening, with LORTZING'S opera, "The Czar and the Shipwright," Mr. SANTLEY taking the part of Peter the Great.... The Crystal Palace Handel Festival will be celebrated on the 16th, 19th, 21st, and 23d of June. The oratorios will be the "Messiah" and "Israel in Egypt," and a miscellaneous selection of Handelian works, sacred and secular...."The management of the Court Theatre," says the Pall Mall Gazette, "proud in the possession of the most gorgeous set of attendants you ever saw in your life—such good-looking men, at least six feet high, and in a lovely claret-colored livery,' have determined on introducing another reform which, like the engagement of the handsome footmen, has been proclaimed in all the papers. No more 'orders' are to be issued—an arrangement which concerns those who give and those who take 'orders,' but it is scarcely interesting, we should think, to the rest of the world. The Court view of the subject, however, is that the paying portion of the public feels humiliated, or at least annoyed, at being placed side by side with non-payers, and that under the new system 'the visitor to the Court will always have the satisfaction of knowing that his neighbor has paid equally with himself for the entertainment provided, and that he is not placed next to those who never would or could pay for the seats they occupy.' It is quite certain that, under the order system, a large number of persons belonging to a sort of theatrical demi-monde, connected not directly with the theatre, but only indirectly, through one or more intervening links with members of the theatrical profession, habitually shirk payment. But if the order-bearers are mere intruders, their intrusion can at least be easily prevented. Actors, who dislike nothing so much as playing to empty benches, are in favor of the order system, under due limitations. So also are the majority of managers. A full house is an advantage in itself; and it is generally understood that a person going in with an order if he does not appl

THROUGH THE SOUTH.

Alabama—Natural Divisions of the State—Montgomery the Capital—An Interesting Interview—Reconstruction, Ku-klux, &c.—The Canebrake Section—What the State Most Needs—Matters Miscellaneous.

From Our Special Correspondent.

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Friday, April 7, 1871.

A learned commentator on his own exploits, whose work, from its proud position of a History of Cæsar's Gallic Conquests, has become a medium for instructing the youthful mind in the mysteries of the Latin language, begins his narrative with the statement that, "All Gaul is divided into three parts." Emulating, in a humble way, the example of this ancient worthy, I claim for Alabama that it is naturally divided into four parts. The northern section of the State is known as the Blue Grass region, and is devoted almost entirely to the raising of stock, for which purpose it is particularly adapted. Next comes the mineral section, in which are found deposits of coal, iron, marble and limestone. It is also claimed that gold has been found in this section. Next below comes the canebrake section, in which I have been spending a few days, and which is rich in cotton fields, and has a fertile and even rich soil. The extreme southern section may be called the timbered region. It extends to within a few miles of the coast line. The last two sections are what may be consipered prairie lands, with sometimes a sandy, sometimes a rich alluvial plain. Montgomery, the capital of the State, and the second city in size and importance, (Mobile being the first,) stands about at the northern edge of the third section, so far as these natural divisions can be considered as having any fixed boundary lines.

MONTGOMERY.

Like Rome, the ancient capital of the civilized world, Montgomery, the first capital of the Southern Confederacy, is a city built on hills, standing high above the level of the muddy Alabama River. In its general appearance it would be called by the tourist a "pretty place." From its high position, its location is healthy, and from the dome of the Capitol a fine view of the surrounding country is obtained. I found Montgomery, like all the Southern cities I have visited, except Atlanta and Savannah, in a sort of stagnant state—but little business being transacted, except perhaps in the cotton market, and everybody complaining of poverty and the "hard times." The disorganized condition of labor, resulting from the dependence of the planters on the negroes to work their fields, and the unsteady condition of the latter class, together with the excess of cotton grown, its consequent low price, and the lack of cereals, are the main causes of the stagnation in the commercial portion of the city, and in fact of the South. From a distance, as seen from the railroad, or looking up broad Market-street to where it stands at the head of the avenue, the Capitol is an imposing-looking structure. And in one sense its imposing nature continues as you approach it. Instead of the elegant marble structure, with its tall columns, lofty portico and towering dome, which its appearance from afar suggests to your imagination, the reality shows a well-proportioned but small stuccoed building, its columns of the same material, and its "lofty portico" narrow and out of all proportion to its height. My directions from the janitor were to "go in and look all over the building; no objections at all to my so doing, as it was all locked up." So my knowledge of the interior arrangements is limited, and only such as I acquired by squinting through keyholes. But here I found the first proofs of the existence of the Ku-klux that I have seen or heard of anywhere. All over the bare and homely walls of the rotunda were scribbled the mystic letters "K. K. K.," with here and there an oath appended to give variety, and occasionally the name of some ambitious youth or maiden attached to rhymes of a most questionable character as to sense or propriety. And this was the Capitol of the State, the seat of its Legislative and Executive wisdom, and notorious for its having been for four short months the Capitol of the Rebel Confederacy. But with the location of the building no fault can be found, standing as it does on a high hill and looking down the wide main street, lined with the stores of the leading business men and bankers of the place. On a small scale, its position may be likened to the situation of the Capitol at Washington, at the head of, and commanding Pennsylvania-avenue. Residences, with large gardens attached, rich in their floral wealth; broad, well-shaded streets, with here and there a huge basin, the reservoir of the artesian wells, and the public watering-place built right in the centre of the square formed by the intersection of half-a-dozen poor hotels, redolent with the classic odor of antiquity and nothing else that is savory; immense cotton warehouses, and the vast ruins of still larger ones, where 80,000 bales of the kingly substance were burnt on the evacuation of the city—such is Montgomery, by no means an unpleasant place in which to spend a few days.

AN INTERESTING INTERVIEW.

On the last day of my stay in Montgomery, I had the pleasure of meeting Ex-Gov. PATON, Judge BIBB and Judge BUGBEE—all three representative men, well advanced in years, and the latter a graduate of Yale College in the Class of 1818. As they expressed a desire to converse on the subject of the present condition of Alabama, I enjoyed a pleasant general conversation of an hour's duration with them before the train left for Macon. As the information obtained covers a multitude of subjects, and is, in its nature, interesting to all, I venture to send you a general abstract, premising that both the latter gentlemen, mentioned above, belong to the class known as "Union men."

Judge BIBB considered that in the main, Alabama was at present in a prosperous condition; but unfortunately too much cotton had been raised and too little corn. Calculating that cotton would bring from 20 cents to 25 cents per pound, the planter gave up the cereals and planted cotton alone. The result was an excess of supply over demand, and a consequent fall in prices to 18 cents and 14 cents per pound. Money being tight, labor disorganized, corn all imported from the West, and the taxes heavy, the cost of raising cotton was about equal to what it sold for. Now, the worst of that was that the entire crop had been raised on credit, or on the assumption that it it would bring at least 20 cents. So the planter having made nothing, and being in debt at the stores for what he had advanced, was obliged to start again on credit and at higher rates; two more such cotton crops would ruin the South, and the hope was that by planting less cotton and more corn the necessity of importing the cereals would be obviated and cotton would command a better price, and thus the planter would be enabled to meet his obligations. The reports from the different sections of the State gave proof that more corn would be raised. It was sometimes urged that the cereals would not grow well where cotton would. That was a fallacy, e. g., a planter being urged to plant oats on a few acres by way of experiment, did so, though not very sanguine of success. He obtained a crop yielding fifty bushels to the acre, and the bushel weighing thirty-six pounds. In the time of its greatest prosperity the entire cotton crop of the South was a little over five million bales; the last crop, with all the disadvantages of the country's unsettled condition, was over four millions.

I inquired as to the real condition of labor and how the negroes worked and what the difficulty was with them.

The Judge said that labor was in a bad condition, because no reliance could be placed on the negroes; they would break their contract at any moment without any warning, "and the first you know you find them gone." They continually expect to "do better" somewhere else, and they are fickle and have not learned yet how to take care of themselves. A planter owning a large plantation was here last night in great tribulation, for, just when the ground was ready for planting, his negroes had left him without warning. Where the labor could be organized, and where the "hands" remained with their old masters, their freedom was of great benefit to the planter for he was relieved of all concern for those who did not work, and only paid those who did work. As an instance of this I may mention Col. DAWSON'S plantation, where the hundred negroes whom he formerly owned have every one remained with him, and are contented and faithful workers.

I inquired as to the value of land.

Land, except in the cities, was exceedingly cheap, and even in the cities much valuable property was being continually sold at a sacrifice. In the country, rich land which before the war brought $65 an acre, could now be bought for $20 and $25. In Georgia the average value of land was about $10 per acre, and in South Carolina, from $4 to $6. This was rather an indication of the poverty of the owners than of the real value of the land. The Southerners are very poor, as a visit to the auction rooms where rich furniture is sold for a song, every day, will convince you.

I asked Judge BIBB what he called a "Union man." "One who opposed secession to the best of his ability, but, when his State seceded, went with his State."

What was the present political condition of Alabama?

There was quiet throughout the State, except here and there, especially in the counties bordering on Mississippi; a little lawlessness, but no more than in any other State. On the whole, Alabama was more quiet and orderly than before the war. All the State officers except the Auditor were Democratic. The Senate was Republican.

How about the Ku-klux? Is there any such thing?

The Judge said that he was not prepared to say that there was no such thing as a Ku-klux organization, but that it bore any similarity to what it had been magnified into he denied most emphatically, and from what he regarded as positive knowledge. Where any such thing existed it was rather in the nature of a vigilance committee in places where the law did not prevail. We all know, he said, that there were many crimes of which the law took no cognizance, as originally in the remote Western settlements. In such places doubtless law and order were preserved in a rather lawless way, but it was still a mooted question whether such committees did not do more good than harm.

What does Alabama ask from the Government to insure a return to prosperity?

"The removal of all disabilities, and to be let alone. The State is orderly and the people well-disposed, but is it not an anomaly that I, who have been a Judge for twelve years and have held many other offices of public trust and confidence, cannot now hold the office of a constable, although any cattle-driver, who can neither read nor write, is eligible for that office?"

I asked what then do you consider as a sufficient punishment for rebellion?

The fact that we were compelled to submit to the United States laws, which we had refused to obey.

I remarked that we could hardly consider that as a punishment, since it was only the enforcement of a right, and it would be but a poor example if the penalty of a resistance to and rebellion against a Government was to consist in a restoration of all previously-existing rights and privileges. With this our interview closed, without my obtaining an answer.

WHAT THE STATE NEEDS.

Leaving your readers to draw their own inferences from the account of the conversation above given, I may say that one result of my observations throughout the South, and this State perhaps more particularly, is the conviction that there is a great need of scientific farmers here. The farming knowledge of this section of the country has not kept pace with the times, and the same rude implements, waste of land and of material, lack of energy and primitive style generally, prevail now that did fifty years ago. What would a New-England farmer say to a field of forty acres plowed in furrows two feet apart, the ground merely scratched to a depth of three or four inches with an old-fashioned cultivator, the seed sown, and a board dragged over the field to cover the furrows, and the ground then left to take care of itself? Subsoil plowing has never yet failed to produce beneficial results in this section, and yet the planters will persist in the old-fashioned "scratching" of the ground. Via antiqua via est tutissima, they say, let him believe it who will.

MISCELLANEOUS.

I have alluded to the general poverty of the South, and this is most conspicuous in the condition of the handsomest residences. Everywhere is seen a lack of repairs, fences falling to pieces, gardens filled with weeds, walls crumbling, &c. A superb residence, with fine grounds and outhouses, but sadly out of order, worth in good condition at least seventy thousand dollars, was sold the other day for twelve thousand dollars. So it is everywhere. Alabama is fertile in marl beds, but so far no phosphate has been discovered in the State, although Col. TAIT, the new Superintendent of Industrial Resources, believes that they exist, since shark's teeth have been found sixty feet below the surface.

The Exchange Hotel is like the Capitol, an imposition within and without, but it is, unfortunately, the best in the city. A new hotel is talked of, and its erection is a "consummation most devoutly to be wished." But I am off on a railroad which uses the old "strap" rail, moves slowly, stopping at every other man's door, and could only make the journey more tedious by stopping at every gate. H. W. R.

GEORGIA.

Cotton Prospects—The Crop of the Present Season—Interest in Sheep and Hog Raising—Proposed Agricultural College—Important Railroad Suits.

From Our Own Correspondent.

MACON, Ga., Monday, April 10, 1871.

The public mind is now thoroughly satisfied that cotton is not going to "jump"—that the "visible supply," showing an increase of nearly six hundred thousand bales, as compared with 1870, has effectually paralyzed its saltatory power, apart from the undeniable fact that the crop of the United States for 1870-71 will exceed four million bales, which in itself is sufficient to put a stop to activity of motion in an upward direction. The weekly sales are beginning to fall away. The supply is well-nigh exhausted. The stocks in the interior are reduced almost to nothing, and in another fortnight the market will be practically closed until the new crop begins to come in. Very few are holding their crop for a better price. Several did this until after the capitulation of Paris, but when it became clear that peace had no influence upon prices, except to depress them, holders let go, and realized as fast as they could, because their creditors compelled them to do so, and secondly, because they had no expectation of any improvement. A very few—men who owe nothing and have means to go on—still hold their crops, but they are so few, as you may suppose, that they are hardly enough fair exceptions to prove a rule.

COTTON-PLANTING TIME.

The fine weather of the past week has been most propitious for planting. Every one who can even by courtesy be called a farmer has availed himself of the opportunity and has been working hard all day, he and his manservant and his maid-servant, his ox and his ass; and if the stranger within his gates knew how to plow and throw up a cotton-bed, it is more than probable that he too was at work. By the time this reaches the TIMES office, the greater portion of the cotton crop will have been planted. A good deal is already in the ground, but from now until the 20th is par excellence cotton-planting time in this section of the State. I have no doubt as to the correctness of my previously-expressed belief that the crop of 1871-72 will be fully one-fourth less in area than that of 1870-71, and with less propitious seasons than that of last year may be considerably less in number of pounds.

SHEEP RAISING.

There are gratifying signs in many directions of a disposition to diversify agricultural industry, and without abandoning the culture of cotton, have other crops and sources of profit and support on the farm. Sheep husbandry is attracting a great deal of attention in the agricultural journals and among farmers. I have been asked by several within the past fortnight to give them the names and address of prominent sheep raisers, from whom they might purchase Cotswold, Merino or South Down sheep, and to recommend them standard works on the subject. The same is true in reference to hogs. Many people in this State have experimented with the White Chesters, but either they did not get the "genuine article," or they did not know how to raise them, or the climate does not suit them, because, as a general thing, they have proved a failure. The Berkshire and Essex are the favorites, and any one who would come along with a choice stock of either of pure blood, could dispose of them readily at remunerative prices.

PROPOSED AGRICULTURAL COLLEGE.

Leading men are agitating the subject of an agricultural college, handsomely endowed by the State, in which a first-class practical education, such as is given at Lansing, Mich., at the Pennsylvania College, and in that of Massachusetts, will be afforded at the lowest possible expense to the young men of Georgia. The plan of the Michigan institution is especially commended, and I have some confidence, from a knowledge of the men who have taken the matter in hand, that it will be pushed through to success. The plan is to get the Legislature to make a grant of the public buildings at Milledgeville, formerly occupied by the State Government, but now tenanted by bats and owls and prowling freedmen, and to grant a liberal endowment of $30,000 or $40,000 for the first year, and $10,000 every succeeding year; or better yet, turn over the buildings and the land belonging to Georgia under the act of Congress granting to each State 30,000 acres of land for each Senator and Representative in Congress, for the establishment of agricultural colleges. The Milledgeville buildings are well adapted to the purpose, and there are attached to them several acres of land—150, I believe—which would answer for the experimental farm. Before agricultural improvement, in the true sense of the term, can be expected, there must be agricultural education. It is the foundation, and without it there can be no substantial improvement.

AN INTERESTING POLITICAL TRIAL.

The trial of Judge LINTON STEPHENS, brother of ALEX. H. STEPHENS, for a violation of the Enforcement act, at Sparta, in Hancock County, at the December election, will take place in a few days at Savannah, before the Circuit Court of the United States, Judges WOOD and ERSKINE presiding. It is creating considerable interest, from the prominent position of the accused, and the knowledge that he will conduct his case in person.

EXTENSIVE RAILROAD SUITS.

There are well-founded rumors of several suits being instituted immediately with a view to set aside the lease of the Western and Atlantic Railroad, formerly the property of the State, but recently leased under authority of an act of the Legislature to a company, of which Ex-Gov. JOSEPH E. BROWN is President, and BEN. H. HILL, Secretary DELANO, Senator CAMERON and Railroad-king SCOTT, of the Pennsylvania Central, are among the lessees. The act requires the lessees to give bond and security in $7,000,000, for the safety of the property, and the faithful performance of the lease. Five millions of this must be in Georgia. The security thus given is the principal railroads of Georgia, pledged by their Presidents or one or two directors, but without the consent of the stockholders. It is alleged that this security is worthless; that the President and directors have no power to pledge the property of their stockholders, and that thus the lessees having given really no security, the lease must be set aside. The "gentlemen of the long robe," as they call lawyers in England, may expect an abundant harvest in any event.

PERSONAL.

Mr. HENRY W. RAYMOND, son of the late HENRY J. RAYMOND, of the TIMES, passed through this city last week on his way to Savannah and Charleston. He only spent part of a day here, but even during that short time he was the recipient of much attention from many leading citizens, and won for himself the goodwill and kind feeling of all who met him. His health, he says, is improved by his Southern tour. QUONDAM.

DECAY OF THE SCHOOLS.

How the Ring is Manipulating our Public Schools—Flagrant Violations of the Law.

Our public school system, with for many years has been the pride of our City, and has been held up as a model one, is now on the eve, we fear, of being brought to the level of a mere political machine. It now having fallen under the baneful influence of the Ring, will soon be shorn of its influence, its integrity will be destroyed, and, if not guarded with a jealous eye and great care, will be utterly ruined, and prove a curse rather than a blessing to the community. Whon once under the sole and contaminating influence of the Ring, whose very name is an abomination, this excellent school system, which has cost us millions of money, will be prostituted to sectarianism of a bigoted character, and used for the advancement of a Church which, having lost power in the East, seeks by every means to establish it on this continent, and finally to set up a government whose controlling power shall be the Church. For some time past W. M. TWEED, the leader of the Ring, has held the balance of power in school matters through his favorites and tools in the Board of Education; the President of which, although born in this country, is a Roman Catholic; the Clerk, LAURENCE KIERNAN, was born in Ireland, and is also of the same faith. Most of the other members of the Board are of no particular creed, except love of greed and power. The Normal College, under the proposed new régime, will be the only source from which teachers can be drawn, and from all that can be learned, only such teachers will be appointed from here as are favorites. In no departments now are the appointments of teachers based upon their respective scholastic abilities, or their fitness to fill the responsible position of a guide or instructor of the young placed under their care. To receive a position at the present time he or she must be presented by some one in the Ring, or, no matter how well qualified the applicant, no appointment is made.

Naturally those who owe their position to this influence favor any plan laid down by their friends, and, in order to retain their places, they too often violate their consciences, and add to the degradation which is gradually to swamp the efficiency of our school system. To further instruct minds of teachers in the desires of the Ring, and to tone them to a uniform understanding of its wishes, a weekly newspaper has been established called the Public School Journal, from which we make a few extracts. In an article which appeared in the first number entitled "A Few Words to Teachers," we find the following words:

"A representative of this office will call at all the schools from which rolls are not sent, and if the teachers object to allowing them to be published, they will most probably in the future be left 'severely alone' in this respect, as we subject ourselves to trouble and expense in this matter more to benefit others than ourselves. We do this, however, without recognizing the right of any teacher to suppress from the public any transactions that take place in the public schools of the City." This quotation is and has been looked upon by a very large number of teachers as a warning not to refuse or offend the proprietors (the Ring) of the Public School Journal. In a second number, among the answers to correspondents, appears the following: "Teacher.—Besides editing a newspaper, we do all sorts of job printing. No printer in the City can get up handsomer or cheaper programmes for school exercises." This means, and is so understood by the teachers, "If you don't get your printing done at our office, (New-York Printing Company,) no notice of your exercises will appear in our paper."

In another number, acknowledging the receipt of several subscriptions, the editor says: "This portion of our friend's epistle might be adopted as a modèle by other teachers who wish the Journal success, and long life (official we suppose) and happiness for themselves."

In another number of the paper we find the following: "The Board of Education is blessed with as polite and as intelligent a corps of clerks as ever took charge of a public office." Your reporter can, of his positive knowledge, deny this statement, for a few days since when in search of information, he found them quite the reverse. As for their "intelligence" they all claimed to know nothing of the movements in the Board, and could not even furnish a list of books used in the public schools. We have quoted sufficient, we think, to show any disinterested reader that this new journal is simply a part of "the machine."

Thus far we have pointed to the one-man power, but now propose to show that the lesser lights must to some extent be propitiated. In these statements we point to the system of favoritism multiplied and permeating to every department in the political arrangement. Of course this deepens and thickens the river of corruption which is tending to a sea of degradation. Mr. FERNANDO WOOD wanted his neice, Miss COOPER, appointed a teacher, and one of the Trustees in the ward in which she resided was commissioned to do the work. A lot of applicants was sent in and the neice was at the foot of the list. All of the applicants were promised a situation "if the Board were unanimous," but it was only unanimous when the foot was reached, and Miss COOPER'S name can be found on the present list of teachers.

One of the rules of the Board of Education is that "no teacher shall be appointed in any school to whom any school officer entitled to act upon the question of the appointment or payment of such teacher is related, by either blood or marriage as father, son, brother, uncle, nephew or first cousin."

In open violation of this rule, A. H. UNDERHILL, who is the Chairman of the Board of Trustees of the Twenty-second Ward, and resides at No. 857 Eighth-avenue, caused to be appointed his daughter, Miss UNDERHILL, to the position of teacher in one of the schools of this City. She was confirmed on the spot, and her name is now borne on the register. Another favorite, and a protégé of Mr. TWEED, is CORNELIUS CORSON, who is Chief of the Bureau of Election Returns, and who is also a part owner of the Transcript; he caused a sister-in-law to be appointed to the position of teacher in the Twenty-second Ward. For a violation of a rule of the Board she was dismissed before they knew the relation she sustained to the Boss. SWEENY was her champion, and when he heard of her dismissal he had the order of dismissal canceled, and she was allowed to resign. Afterward, owing to the peculiar influence of her friends, she could have been reinstated, and held any position in the gift of the Board she might have asked, but she preferred to marry into the Ring. Of the rules of the Board, article 13, section 40, subdivision 10 says: "No leave of absence on pay for a longer period than one week, or five school days, in any one month shall be valid, unless confirmed by the Board." It is a notorious fact that a teacher that has political influence can be absent as long as he or she sees fit, provided the same is in the good graces of the visiting physician of the Board. If, in case of sickness, the teachers fail to attend to their duties, the certificate of the family physician is not sufficient to avert loss of pay.

Section 43 of the rules of the Board says: "No teacher shall make or contribute toward any gift to a school officer or Superintendent, nor shall money or other things be, in any case, collected or taken from a pupil for the purpose of presenting a gift or testimonial to a teacher, school officer or Superintendent, or for any other purpose, unless the same shall be for the sole benefit of the pupils and previously sanctioned by the Board of Trustees or by this Board." In violation of this rule an assessment was made upon the teachers of the Nineteenth Ward to purchase a diamond pin to adorn the bosom of TERRENCE FARLEY, a member of the Board of Aldermen. This assessment was made from the purses of ill-paid, hard-working school teachers, many of whom were the sole dependence of a large family, and who had to do the will of this scandalous Ring or forfeit their places. We know now where TERRENCE FARLEY obtained his glittering bosom pin.

Up to the present year the award of contracts for supplying books to the public schools has been made to the lowest bidder. All the publishers have hitherto furnished in their proposals all school and text books published by them, with the price at which they would be furnished. When there has been more than one bidder for a given book, or set of books, the contract has been awarded to the lowest, but if there was only one bidder it was awarded to him, the object of the Board being to obtain all the standard educational works, from which the teachers could make selection according to their different tastes. The proposals for 1871 included, with one or two exceptions, and the exceptions were books of reference, or books that are obsolete, all those embraced in the proposals of 1870. In those proposals were the books published by the Messrs. HARPERS, including French's Arithmetics, Wilson's Readers and Spellers, Harper's United States History, Schort, Caikin's Object Lessons, Wilson's Concentric Globes, and Harper's School and Family Slate. The bids were invited between Dec. 5 and 28, on which they were to be opened. The HARPERS were among the bidders, and when the proposals were opened the bids for the books above-named were favorably considered by the Committee, as in former years. The Weekly of Messrs. HARPER had been for some time cartooning TWEED in the bitterest style of art. Prominent among these were those published Oct. 15, 1870, entitled "The Tammany Decoy;" Oct. 22, "The Shepherd and His Faithful Dog;" Oct. 29, "The Power Behind the Throne;" Nov. 5, "Our Modern Khalif Reviewing His Army." The holidays intervening, the cartoons were supplanted to season-cuts, but on the 14th of January they were resumed, and a cartoon entitled "Tweedledee and Tweedledum." ("A Christmas Pantomime at Tammany Hall.") "Clown to Pantaloon."—"Lets blind them with this and then take more." This picture represented TWEED standing at the City Treasury safe, and with one hand giving his followers a few thousand dollars, while SWEENY was filching a larger sum for their private use. It was a very striking cartoon and caused considerable comment in the City at the time. When the paper was shown to Mr. TWEED, he is reported to have said: "That is the last straw that breaks this camel's back," and he immediately sent word to his subservient tools in the Board of Education to reject all bids made by the HARPERS. This was two or three days after the appearance of the cartoon.

After the above statement of facts, the public will not be surprised when informed that it is the intention of the Ring to have books of instruction prepared by its favorites, and to be printed exclusively by the New-York Printing Company, an association composed of the leading members of the Ring. The plans for this gigantic swindle have not been matured, but the fact that such a plan has been broached is an augury that it will be successfully and profitably carried out. It is believed that these books will be written with a view of furthering some particular creed; their authors will in many instances be aliens—men who have written against our system of government, and who have marked religious belief. The habit of Trustees and members of the Board inquiring of candidates for the position of teacher, "What Church do you belong to or attend?" is an almost sure precursor of the aims of the Ring as far as religious teaching in our schools is concerned. Bad men are retained in the schools, and pliant ones are continually being added to the list, until the day is not far distant when—under the contaminating influence of TWEED and his damnable Ring, composed of bigoted Roman Catholics, and men without either conscience or religion—our schools will be transformed into religious training-schools and nurseries, for a faith which is but an outward show, and made up of tinkling brass and sounding cymbals. To this we are drifting, and W. M. TWEED is the leader and great high priest of this iniquity.

A Batch of Casualties.

JAMES KREMAN, of No. 227 East Twenty-ninth-street, was accidentally run over by an ash-cart on Second-avenue, near Thirty-sixth-street, last evening, and was severely injured.

JOHN WILLIAMS, of No. 224 Spring-street, fell off the front platform of a Second-avenue car in Allen-street, near Rivington-street, and was severely injured.

HAYDEN CLARK, of No. 25 Pearsall-street, Brooklyn, fell from his truck in South-street, near Beekman, and the wheels passing over his right arm, fractured it above the elbow. He was taken to the Park Hospital.

JAMES CAREY, nineteen, of No. 154 West Fifty-fourth-street, fell from the second story of the new building in Fifty fourth-street, near Tenth-avenue, and received serious injuries.

JOHN MCCANN, of No. 79 Baxter-street, while at work on the steam-ship Tyrian, at Pier No. 4 North River, was seriously injured about the head, by a barrel of flour falling upon him. He was cared for at the Park Hospital.

JAMES TAYLOR, of No. 257 Hudson-street, while at work on the steamer City of New-York, at Pier No. 45 North River, fell into the hold and received serious injuries. He was cared for at Bellevue Hospital.

The Value of Immigration.

Mr. EDWARD YOUNG, Chief of the Bureau of Statistics, in his report to Secretary BOUTWELL, supplies a carefully-condensed history of immigration from 1790 to Dec. 31, 1870. During that period the aggregate arrivals were 7,809,365. Of this number Great Britain and possessions contributed more than one-half. Germany ranks next, and of the remainder, the largest number were from France. The ten years ending on the 31st day of December, 1870, show a total immigration from Sweden and Norway of 117,799, against 20,931 for the ten years preceding. Chinese immigration never reached 15,000 in a single year, and Russia, from its vast population, contributed only 4,045 immigrants in eighty years.

In the decade from 1850 to 1860, immigration reached its maximum, the total arrivals being 2,598,214. The decrease in the last decade was 106,763, and would have been much larger but for the assistance of Denmark, Sweden and Norway and British America. There was a falling off in the Irish immigration of 161,783, and in the German of 126,324. In the first two years of the last decade, there was a large decrease, the total immigration not having exceeded 183,907. From 1862 until the breaking out of the Franco-Prussian war, there was a rapid increase, the total of 1869 being 395,922.

Twenty-five per cent. of all the immigrants were under fifteen years of age, and only fifteen per cent. over forty, leaving sixty per cent. in the prime of life, and ready to aid by their strength and industry in developing the resources of the country. Mr. YOUNG estimates the average value of immigrants at $800, basing his calculations on $400 as a yearly average of wages. Even at this low estimate, the wealth of the country, during the last half century, would have been increased $6,243,880 through immigration. The population of Iowa increased from 43,112 to 1,181,359, between 1840 and 1870, and Iowa is a fair average of the increase in all the Western States. The value of immigration is developing the resources of a country is shown to great advantage by contrasting the States of the North and West with those of the South. In 1790 the North and South were nearly equal in population and wealth. In 1870 the North had a population exceeding that of the South by eleven millions, with a proportionate increase of wealth and prosperity.

ST. MARY'S FAIR.

New Attractions and Increased Attendance—Proposed Dramatic and Musical Entertainments.

Success continues to attend the praiseworthy efforts of the ladies who have so generously devoted so much of their time to the good work of providing a home for the little waifs of humanity in the City of Churches. A most creditable feature in connection with the St. Mary's Fair is the fact that it is patronized by all classes and all creeds, and that representatives of all sections of Protestantism are to be found working side by side with Catholic ladies as managers of the undertaking.

The Fair, which will positively close on Wednesday night next, is to be followed by a performance, on Thursday, tendered by Mr. and Mrs. BARNEY WILLIAMS, and in which HARRY PEARSON, from the Globe Theatre, Boston, will appear as Robin Hood, in "Fortune's Frolic." On Friday, a grand concert is to come off, in which Mrs. Ex-Gov. LOWE is prominently interested. The following ladies and gentlemen will take part in the concert: Mme. Anna Bishop, Mlle. Krebs, Mme. Tedesca-Ramat, violon virtuoso to the King of Sweden; Miss Mooney, contralto; Mr. Simpson, tenor; Alberto Laurence, baritone, and, by special request, a string quartet by well-known artists. The Fenian exiles, Gen. Thomas F. Burke and O'Donovan Rossa, have promised to attend.

On Saturday a grand dramatic performance will be given by the Clinton Dramatic and Musical Society, to be followed by a matinée tendered by the Globe Theatre. Mr. and Mrs. CONWAY have also offered a benefit.

Such offers of support show the favor in which the affair is viewed by the public. It must be gratifying to the ladies to find that their efforts will be crowned by more than usual success. The Academy of Music was so densely filled last night by the élite of Brooklyn that locomotion was at times nearly impossible. The result is that the articles on the various tables are fast disappearing. St. Peter's table is doing well under the supervision of the attentive lady managers, Mrs. BRANDIES and Mrs. M. HENNESSY, who have spared no trouble to make the Fair a success. Their list of shares for the $1,000 United States bond is nearly filled, many benevolent institutions having manifested their interest by taking each a number of shares, and many charitably-disposed gentlemen have also taken chances, with a view, if successful, of presenting the bond to some charitable institution. Still a larger number have invested their $2 for the purpose of holding, if fortunate enough to win it, the $1,000 to their bank account. The drawing will take place on Wednesday, so that those who have not yet taken shares have still a chance. The promised portrait by FRANCISCO AUGERO is meeting with unusual favor. The copy of RUBENS' original painting is attracting much attention, and the competition for the "Spanish Bride" is very brisk. A chance of winning this beautiful Spanish lady is given for 50 cents.

Mrs. CASTNER has been very successful at the Hospital and Foundling table, and some very valuable prizes have already been won, Street Commissioner FUREY, Judge WALSH, Mr. MICHAELS, Mr. MILBEN, and others being among the fortunate. The two camel-hair shawls are still open for chances, besides a gold bond for $100, a set of silver harness, and other articles. Mrs. LOWE and Mrs. PRATT are completing their list for the Grand Weber piano at $1 a chance. Mrs. LEMARCHE, "Star of the Sea," has also a fine piano, worth $600, which is offering at $2 a share, and her handsome suite of bedroom furniture, at $1 a chance, is attracting many customers. Mrs. DANIEL BYRNE has some very valuable articles. Her table is deserving of a visit. Mrs. BRYCE has been very successful, and her lists for the handsome wagonet, watches and sewing-machines, at fifty cents, are filling rapidly. Mrs. MCLAUGHLIN, Mrs. MCMANUS' table, has realized a considerable sum. She has still for disposal two suites of furniture, silver services, and other useful articles. Mrs. OSTERMOOR and Mrs. KINSELLA, St. Charles Borromeo's table, have gold watches, dinner sets and sewing-machines at one dollar a chance. The refreshment table, as usual, was well patronized last evening, and was well supplied with all requisites. The lady assistants, under Mrs. RIORDAN, were most attentive in catering to the wants of their numerous patrons. Mrs. O'TOOLE and Miss KONVALINKEN, two handsome young ladies, deserve especial mention.

Miss DUYER, Miss SHAUGHNESSY, Miss HARVEY, Miss RAMEL and Miss WALLACH graced the floral temple, and did a good trade among the young folks.

A Gang of Burglars Captured.

At 11 o'clock, last night, Officers KIRSH and MCGUIRE arrested JOSEPH HYMAN and PATRICK KELLY, two burglars, whom they detected in the act of forcing an entrance into the gold pen factory of JOHN H. RANCH, No. 85 White-stret. In the possession of the burglars were found twenty-one steel wedges, a chisel, sledge hammer, screw driver, a dark lantern, a boxes of matches, and a variety of other burglarious tools. HYMAN and KELLY were locked up at the Franklin-street Police Station, and will be brought before Justice HOGAN at the Tombs Police Court this morning.

Mysterious Murder in Cincinnati—A Man Shot in His Bed.

From the Cincinnati Gazette, April 21.

At about 1 o'clock this morning, as Officer HEPWORTH was pursuing his rounds, he was startled by two boys, who rushed up to him with the thrilling news that a man had been shot at No. 20 Arch-street, between Broadway and Ludlow. Hastening to the spot indicated, he found a man lying on a bed with a fearful wound over the left temple, from which his brains were protruding, while the bed-clothes were clotted with gore. The man was still alive, but survived but a few minutes after the arrival of the officer. The name of the murdered man is HENRY TEALE. He is a paper-carrier by occupation, and has what is known as the "Pendleton route" for the Gazette, Enquirer and Commercial. The house in which he lived is occupied by several other families, but it seemed that none of the inmates heard any disturbance except Mrs. ANTHONY, who occupied a room adjoining that in which Mr. TEALE lived. She was awakened by what she thought was the slamming of a door, and immediately afterward she heard groans issuing from TEALE'S apartments, and recognized the voice of his wife, who exclaimed, "Oh, my God!" Alarmed at this, and not daring to venture alone into the room, she awoke Mr. and Mrs. JENNINGS, who lived in an adjoining rooms. Mr. JENNINGS went to TEALE'S room and found the door ajar. Mrs. TEALE was kneeling on the floor with her head resting on the edge of the bed, and Mr. TEALE was lying in bed upon his back, with the frightful wound over his left temple. Mr. JENNINGS immediately sent for Dr. TATE, who examined the wounded man, and pronounced the wound necessarily fatal. Mrs. TEALE seemed quite distracted by the blow, which had so suddenly deprived her of a loved and loving husband. She raved incoherently about her husband having a great many enemies who sought his life, but was unable to give any intelligible account of the tragedy up to the time when our reporter left the scene. No pistol or other instrument of death was found in the chamber, and it seems quite clear that the dastardly assassin fired the fatal pistol shot through the partly open door. Who the villian was, or what the motive that led him to commit the cowardly deed, time alone can determine. When Mrs. TEALE recovers from the dreadful shock she may be able to give such information as will lead to the detection of the criminal.

SATURDAY, April 22—P. M.

The Bank averages of the week are significant of increasing ease in the Money market, as we advance toward the Summer months. The return of Greenbacks to the City Banks since last Monday amount to $4,002,645. The loss in Gold and Gold Notes is $1,742,076. The Loans show a pretty steady movement, $972,770 less than on the previous return. The general line of Deposits is up $2,454,958. The lawful Money strength of the movement is $1,760,000 better than last week, and the present excess over the required 25 ₱ cent. to liabilities is $8,430,000. The Export of Gold and Silver of all descriptions for the week is $3,332,799. The Treasury Office received for Gold Customs $3,611,942, and sold on Thursday $4,000,000 Gold. Next week the Treasury will prepay all the May interest on the Public Debt that may be presented, and will sell on Thursday at least $2,000,000, and more if the Gold Brokers should bid as liberally as at the last sale. We estimate that the whole supply from the Treasury will largely exceed the business of the week, and of the probable demand for export.

Money was in good supply through the day, and but few Brokers paid over 6 ₱ cent., while some of them had balances left on call at 5 ₱ cent.

The sales of Gold were ⅛@¼ ₱ cent lower than on Friday. The quotation opened, late in the day, at 111, and closed 110⅞@110⅞ ₱ cent.

Exchange was weaker on short sight London, and barely steady at 109⅞ for 60 days' Bills. There is a considerable amount of short sight Exchange making against United States 5-20s and Railway Bonds for the London and Frankfort markets.

The Public Funds on the 5-20s, usually employed for remittance abroad, were a small fraction easier than on Friday, in sympathy with Gold, in the forenoon, but the offerings were not large or of a pressing nature, and late in the day the 5-20s of 1867 closed at 112⅛@112⅜ ₱ cent., or a fraction higher than on Friday. The 1862s are scarce in this market. Nearly the whole Coupon issue is already, and has been for several years, owned abroad.

On the Stock Exchange the buoyancy was more general than at any time during the week, embracing some of the Southern State Bonds and all the Pacific Railway Mortgages. Pacific Mail Shares were also excited, and nearly the entire list of New-York and Western Roads in very strong speculative demand. New-York Central led the market, closely followed by Central Scrip, Harlem, Reading, Union Pacific, Lake Shore, New-Jersey Central, Delaware and Lackawanna and Wabash. The interest continued strong in the St. Pauls, and steady in the North-wests, Ohio and Mississippi and Cleveland and Pittsburg. The dealings in the St. Louis and Iron Mountain Shares, in sympathy with the high credit of the Mortgage Bonds on the Road, and its increasing traffic, attract more attention, and the price advanced to 61 ₱ cent.

In the afternoon about 3 o'clock there was a break of ⅛@¼ ₱ cent. in Railway quotations from the best sales of the day, and there was some disposition on the part of leaders to meet the lower market; but this feeling lasted but a short time, and before the Brokers left the Street the demand for New-York Central and the Western Roads was again strong; closing as follows as compared with the last prices of Friday night:

Increase	$23,963 62

The week's imports of General Merchandise have been to the Specie value of $4,754,-207.

We copy, as confirmatory of our own reports on the subject, the following details of the profligate legislation of the Tammany Ring at Albany, and if these figures are not a sufficient warning to the managers of our Savings Banks and other provident institutions to lessen the enormous amount now held, rather than tolerate further investments in the Bonds of the City and County, we should say that it was about time for the people who have intrusted their savings to such management had best look to the personal care of their own Money.

"The strong temptation to which Governments which have commenced the issue of irredeemable currency are subjected, to continue the inflation until the bubble bursts, finds its counterpart in the Tammany expansion of the funded debt of New-York. Tammany cares as little for the debts of New-York City as FISK does for those of the Erie Railway, though neither dares to make a full and true statement of accounts. It will shortly be a question which is better entitled to the confidence of capitalists. During this year's session of Mr. TWEED'S Legislature, the Corporation of New-York (or Tammany Ring) has been authorized to issue the bonds of the City to an amount sufficient to raise upward of twelve and a half million dollars. The following table will serve to explain how the great two per cent. retrenchment (!) is rendered possible:

MONEY AUTHORIZED TO BE RAISED IN 1871 BY THE SALE OF BONDS.

For investment in Viaduct Railway stock	$5,000,000
For improvements in parks	3,000,000
For improvement of docks, (yearly account of 1870)	3,000,000
For water-pipes, waterfasters, &c	1,300,000
For increasing water (supply yearly,)	1,000,000
For completion of Court-house in City Hall Park	750,000
For fire-alarm telegraph	450,000
For parade ground above Fifty-ninth-street	350,000
For completion of Court-house, Third Judicial District	300,000
For Sheriff's Bailey (estimated,)	250,000
For repairing sewers, (yearly,)	100,000
For care of persons having contagious diseases	100,000
Total	$15,800,000

Of the above amounts all but the $3,000,000 for docks were authorized by laws passed at this session. Last year the sum of $600,000 was authorized to be raised for the completion of the New Court-house. This year the corresponding amount for $700,000. Last year the Controller was directed to raise $400,000 to pay for the fire-alarm telegraph. This year that same little telegraph comes in for $450,000. Last year $400,000 was appropriated for the Third Judicial Court-house, to be raised by tax; this year the said Court-house comes in for $300,000 more, to be raised by the sale of bonds.

The cost of governing New-York City, including interest on the debt and profits to the Ring, may be roughly estimated as follows for the year 1871:

To be raised by sale of bonds, as above	$15,800,000
To be raised by tax, say	24,000,000
Assessments for street improvements, say	6,000,000
Fees, licenses, permits, fines, &c., say	2,400,000
Total	$48,000,000

The above represents a burden of $50 per head for each inhabitant of the City. The present debt of the City is somewhere between $80,000,000 and $100,000,000, of which the savings banks of the City alone hold $50,000,000. The problem here presents itself whether it be desirable, under existing circumstances, that the credit of the City should stand high, or in correspondence with the character of those who are so industriously adding to the burden. Before this Winter it has been customary for the Legislature to enact that the seven per cent. bonds of the City should not be sold at less than par by the Controller. No such restriction has this year been imposed, and men now living, and of ripe age, too, may yet see the seven per cent. bonds of the City of New-York quoted on the stock lists at 80, or indefinitely less."

The receipts of the Camden and Atlantic Railroad for the year ending Dec. 31, 1870, as given by the American Railroad Journal, were as follows:

From passengers	$222,069 94
From freights	201,208 33
From express	15,750 90
From United States mail	3,000 00
From miscellaneous	1,529 96

BANKING AND FINANCIAL.

☞ NEW LOAN OF THE UNITED STATES.

The subscriptions to the New Five Per Cent. Stock of the United States now amount to about $61,500,000. They are confidently expected to reach $200,000,000 by the time the New Bonds are ready for delivery in May. The proposals of the Secretary of the Treasury will then be changed to the following programme:

First—Bonds to the amount of three hundred millions of dollars, payable in coin, at the pleasure of the United States, after ten years from the date of their issue, and bearing interest, payable quarterly in coin, at the rate of five per cent. per annum.

Second—Bonds to the amount of three hundred millions of dollars, payable in coin, at the pleasure of the United States, after fifteen years from the date of their issue, and bearing interest, payable quarterly in coin, at the rate of four and a half per cent. per annum.

Third—Bonds to the amount of seven hundred millions of dollars, payable in coin, at the pleasure of the United States, after thirty years from the date of their issue, and bearing interest, payable quarterly in coin, at the rate of four per cent. per annum.

Subscriptions to the loan will have preference, after the above-mentioned two hundred millions are taken up, in the following order, namely:

First—Subscriptions for equal amounts of each class of bonds.

Second—Subscriptions for equal amounts of bonds bearing interest at the rate of four and a half per cent., and of bonds bearing interest at the rate of five per cent.

Third—Subscriptions for any five per cent. bonds that may not be subscribed for in the preceding classes.

Subscriptions to the remainder of the $200,000,000 of five per cents., which are unconditional, are now going on, and the bonds will soon be issued to the subscribers, who can receive a scrip certificate in advance, if they desire to pay their gold or exchange United States 5-20s at once, in the registered or coupon form. Registered bonds will be issued of the denominations of $50, $100, $500, $1,000, $5,000 and $10,000, and coupon bonds of each denomination except the last two. The interest will be payable in the United States at the office of the Treasurer, any Assistant Treasurer, or designated depository of the Government, quarterly, on the first days of February, May, August and November, in each year.

The bonds of the several classes aforesaid, and the interest thereon, are exempt from the payment of all taxes or dues of the United States, as well as from taxation in any form by or under State, municipal, or local authority.

After maturity, the bonds last issued will be first redeemed, by classes and numbers, as may be designated by the Secretary of the Treasury.

The reduction of the public debt since the close of the war of the rebellion, and the relief at the same time, to the annual burden of interest, are as follows:

Principal of debt, 1865	$2,755,995,275
Paid under Johnson	285,595,371
Principal, March 4, 1869	$2,491,399,904
Paid under Grant	223,083,673
Present public debt	$2,268,316,231
Interest charge, 1865	$151,532,051
Reduced in four years by redemptions and funding 7-30 notes	25,442,501
Interest charge, 1869	$126,339,550
Reduced in two years by payment	12,052,998
Present interest charge	$114,336,552

The proposed further reduction of the annual interest charge upon the public debt by refunding is as follows:

By exchange of $500,000,000 United States six per cents for new five per cents of 1881	$5,000,000
By exchange of $300,000,000 United States six per cents for four and a half per cents of 1886	4,500,000
By exchange of $700,000,000 United States six per cents for four per cents of 1901	14,000,000
Total saving per annum by refunding	$23,500,000

The whole proceeds of the new loans will be applied to the payment or redemption and cancellation of the 5-20 years six per cent. bonds, and, in addition to these proceeds, the 5-20s are now being reduced by purchase at the rate of $10,000,000 per month. C. C. NORVELL,
In charge of advertising United States loans.

THE MITCHELL-DIX SUIT—STATE VS. FEDERAL JURISDICTION.

John Mitchell vs. John A. Dix.—This action, which is for false imprisonment, came up on a motion to remove it from the State Court to the Circuit Court of the United States, under the provisions of the fifth section of the act of Congress approved the 3d of March, 1863, and of an act amendatory thereof approved May 11, 1866, and to stay proceedings in the State Court. The motion was made on the following statement of facts and points presented by plaintiff's counsel: The plaintiff, a citizen of the State of New-York, was arrested on the 14th of June, 1865, transported beyond the limits of the State of New-York to Fortress Monroe, in the State of Virginia, and there imprisoned four months and sixteen days by defendant. The plaintiff was not on the 14th of June, 1865, or at any other time, in the military or naval service of the United States, or in the militia in active service in the time of war or public danger. The plaintiff was never presented by, or was ever an indictment found against him by a Grand Jury, was never charged with any offense or crime against the laws of the United States, or any of them. His right to a public and speedy trial by jury was denied. He was never informed of the nature and cause of the accusation against him, was never confronted with witnesses, or had compulsory process for obtaining their presence in his favor, and was deprived of the benefit of counsel. He (counsel) submitted that the acts of Congress of March 3, 1863, and the act amendatory thereof, approved May 11, 1866, are unconstitutional. If such acts are constitutional, they have no application to the cases made by plaintiff.

LADIES,

It is a constant complaint among those who have traveled in Europe, that they cannot obtain an Alpaca which would wear like those purchased in the Old Country. Such goods are not brought here, but instead of them, inferior makes, manufactured expressly for the American market, to look cheap under the gas, fineness and weight produced by cotton weighting, and lustre by hot pressing. You cannot be deceived for selecting such goods. You have had the opportunity often offered you, and, on a retailer's floor, they are scarcely to be distinguished from best goods; but they are scarcely out of the dressmakers' hands before the color is lost, and the lustre gone. You need complain of this no more. In the

DIAMOND D MOHAIRS

You are offered the best Alpaca made in Great Britain. They only cost a few cents more than the trash that has hitherto been foisted on you. Made of the best wool, they do not lose their color or lustre. There is no dressing in them, and they will not crease. Water will not injure them, and they may be sponged off when soiled.
Observe the trade-mark and see that you get the right goods. Try this, and you will find that for once you have a handsome dress that will remain handsome.

RENTS IN BROOKLYN.

Important Hints for Housekeepers—The Supply of Houses Exceeding the Demand—Illustrations of Depreciation of Property—Some of the Causes—Rapid Transit an Imperative Necessity.

It may appear to be rather late in the season to offer advice to persons who may be in search of tenements wherein to stow themselves and their household goods during the ensuing year, for by this time it is usual for those who contemplate moving to secure a habitation, or, at least, decide upon their future destiny in this respect. But it would seem that a very large number of the moving population of Brooklyn are, even at this late day, undecided where to go, so numerous are the attractions presented on almost every hand. It would be well for some of those long-time residents of Tax and Ring ridden Gotham, to cross the ferry and see what splendid bargains are offered them in the way of houses, at rents more than fifty per cent. less than they are compelled to pay in New-York. The columns of the daily papers of Brooklyn are teeming with advertisements of houses to let; the house agents have their books loaded down with descriptions of desirable property, and the fronts of houses on almost every street bear the notice of "To let." Still, house-hunters go about the streets unsatisfied.

THE CAUSE.

The cause of this glut of houses is easily explained. The war of the rebellion caused a suspension of building operations all over the city, so that by the close of the war the demand was greatly in excess of the supply. The high prices of labor and materials served to retard the improvement of property, and from 1865 to 1869 comparatively few new buildings were erected, and rents rose to enormous figures, greatly enriching the owners of houses. These high rents gave an impetus to building, and real estate speculations served to enhance the rise of all desirable unimproved property. Whole blocks of houses of various classes were put up, and employment was given to mechanics almost without stint. Thus building progressed, favored by speculations and by the accommodations afforded by owners of unimproved property, until not only the heart of the city was pretty thoroughly built up, but all the out-lying wards were filled with desirable tenements. Thus the work went on from month to month, until last Spring it was perceived it was being overdone. Last year the enormous increase of taxes—eating up the substance of land-owners—induced many of them to offer terms to builders whereby the unimproved property could be built upon and thus assist in paying the expenses. The owner of a plot of ground would arrange with a builder to erect a block of houses, and give a mortgage for the land, trusting to the sale of the buildings, when completed, to reimburse both owner of land and houses. But these expectations have not been realized, and now property-owners find that there are more houses than there are tenants to occupy them, except at rents which will not pay even a fair interest upon the investment. There are houses now unoccupied, in every respect first-class, and with all the modern improvements, which would, if they were located in almost any part of New-York below Fifty-ninth-street, rent for from $4,000 to $5,000, for which the owners would be glad to get $1,800 rent. Many of these houses have cost from $30,000 to $40,000 to build, and could not be sold today for more than two-thirds these figures. The depreciation of property has been enormous, and many builders who have erected houses on speculation are swamped financially, while the owners of the land will have as much as they can do to secure the advances they have made. Such disastrous speculations as these may tend to retard building operations for a few years, but there is little doubt that there will be a sufficiency of houses for many years to come.

THE DEPRECIATION IN RENTS.

A glance at the lists in the hands of the real estate agents will be of interest. A three-story brick house with all improvements in Elliott-place, a most desirable location, is offered for $800 per annum; this house would have been eagerly taken three years ago for $1,200. A first-class brown-stone house on the Heights, with eleven rooms and every improvement, is offered for $1,400, and the owner would willingly take $1,300; three years ago he would have laughed to scorn any one who offered $2,000. A three-story frame house on the Heights, within ten minutes' walk of Wall-street Ferry, with twelve rooms, and all improvements, can be had for "only $1,000." In almost every street on the Heights are to be found desirable houses for from $1,000 to $1,200, which even last year were held at from $1,200 to $1,500. Within walking distance of the ferries, in excellent neighborhoods, rents of first-class houses range from $700 to $1,000, and many of these will most likely be unoccupied for the greater part of the Summer. Those who are willing to suffer the inconvenience of riding a short distance on the city cars, can be accommodated with houses within half an hour's ride of the ferries for from $500 to $600 per annum. Two hundred two-story cottages with nine rooms each, one block from Fulton-avenue, and one hour to the ferry, are offered at from $120 to $240. All through the most desirable part of the Ninth, Twenty-second and Ninth Wards—not in the immediate vicinity of Prospect Park—rents range from $400 to $750. Even in that section of the city around the plaza of the Park, and on the western slope of the hill between Fifth and Ninth avenues, brown-stone houses, which last year rented for $1,000 to $1,500, can now be obtained for from $800 to $1,000, and the owners will be most obsequious in their attentions to a tenant. These illustrations will serve to show how rents have declined, and what golden opportunities there are for bargains in the way of desirable locations. Those who object to residences at considerable distances from the ferries, and limit their comforts and their purse within walking distance, and residents of New-York who may be groaning under the burdens of enormous rents can find in Brooklyn a home and a hearty welcome.

WILLIAMSBURG.

There is one section of the city which does not appear very desirable for a residence; still, even here there are many attractive places. The Eastern District (formerly known as Williamsburg) has suffered grievously by reason of the parsimony of the conductors of the ferries, but it is hoped that this burden will soon be lightened somewhat, and then this section will become prosperous. Houses in that locality are far cheaper than they are in the Western District, and very few landlords have the temerity to demand more than $800 to $1,000 for strictly first-class residences. The streets are all in good order, and are provided with gas and water mains and sewers, and this part of the city is as well governed and protected as the other. Indeed, in many respects, a house in the Eastern District is more desirable than one in the Western, for the travel by the cars is not so great, and communication with the outskirts is more frequent. The finest class of dwellings here are in the Nineteenth Ward, though some very attractive residences are to be found in the Eighteenth and the Seventeenth Wards.

THE CAR ACCOMMODATION.

The miserable management of the great monopoly of Brooklyn—the Brooklyn City Railroad Company—detracts greatly from the prosperity of the city. This Company own eight lines of travel, the terminus of each of which is at Fulton Ferry. The cars, loaded down with passengers at morning and evening, are forced to go up an incline of nearly a mile, and then, on four of the lines, up another incline of about the same distance; and by the time the cars reach the summit, the horses are nearly wearied out, and the patience of the passengers is exhausted. The accommodation is by no means equal to the demand, and it is only recently that the Company have manifested the least disposition to apply any remedy. They have now constructed turn-outs in the vicinity of the City Hall, whereon extra cars are placed; but even thus was not done until it was made compulsory by the action of the city authorities. The Company have not only monopolized the streets, but have entirely appropriated the foot of Fulton-street, and still are not willing to accommodate the public. If they were more liberal in the running of their cars there is no doubt that property in the outskirts would be in greater demand. As it is there is a reluctance on the part of those who do business in New-York to live at such a distance from the ferry as necessitates a resort to the cars of the Brooklyn City Railroad Company. When the bridge is completed, and other means of rapid transit afforded, property in the outskirts will become desirable. Until then people will throng the inner wards and suffer the inconvenience of "doubling up," rather than take houses in the suburbs and spend two hours each day in hanging on to the straps of a railroad car.

THE TAXES.

The enormous taxes which are saddled upon Brooklyn property in consequence of a reckless administration of municipal affairs are rapidly ruining the city. The burdens are felt severely by property-owners, and the final share must be borne by the tenant population, though just now, with the very low rents, the landlords are compelled to carry the greater part of the load. This makes men, who would otherwise be liberal in improving and repairing their houses, reluctant to incur any additional expense, and moreover tends to affect the tenure of leases. Landlords are almost constantly in the market as sellers, and tenants are not permitted to rent longer than one year, because the owner does not wish to have a lien upon his property which may endanger its sale. Besides, owners are each year looking forward to a season when their houses will bring an increased price, and they will thus be repaid for their enormous outlays. The improved pavements which have been laid for the use of the wealthy, and which have been the source of so much profit to the Ring, have almost ruined property-owners, and led them to resist by legal measures the payment of the assessments. On some of the thoroughfares where the Nicolson has been laid, tenants are leaving the houses, preferring to remove to some neighborhood where their rest will not be disturbed nor the lives of their children endangered by reason of the race-course in the vicinity of their dwellings. Thus that which was claimed to be an improvement is a detriment to property, and assists in the general depreciation which has been so marked during the past year.

FURNITURE MOVING.

How to do it and How Not to do it—The Responsible and the Irresponsible Methods—Tariff of Charges for the 1st of May.

The number of movers on the 1st of May seems to increase annually. Some "old fogies" call moving a relic of barbarism, and believe that a man who changes his residence every year or two is little better than the Ishmaelite, or the Indian who habitually pulled up his stakes once a week; but still the changing goes on. Whether this annual upheaval of society is, on the whole, a good thing or not, it is now inevitable, and it is hence a satisfaction to be able to reflect that migration is getting to be a comparatively pleasant operation, and that the New-York nomad need no longer suffer the pangs of proprietary anxiety which have heretofore made him wish on each recurrence of that awful day that his only movables were a tent, a camp-kettle, a blanket and a bottle of fire-water, like those of his aboriginal prototype.

A great change has taken place in the methods of moving furniture during the last few years. The clumsy smasher who rolled and tumbled your cherished household goods into his tip-cart amid the crash of crockery and the scratching and grating of cabinet furniture, was then the best and only medium of transportation. To stand and watch his destructive energy in agony and silence as he banged mirrors against the door-posts, and jolted your sideboard merrily down the stone steps, was the inevitable. The only alternative, staying where you were, everybody knows to be out of the question when the mind has once been made up to move. Now, however, all is changed. In the place of the tip-cart we have real furniture-wagons, commodious, convenient, hung on springs—nay, painted red or blue, or both, and endowed perhaps with a name, painted in front—"Polly Brown," "The Shamrock," "The Jibbenainosay," or some similar appellation, indicating of itself that the proprietor is a man of taste and education, though, sometimes, alas, it proves not to be the case. Generally speaking, however, the proprietor, like his vehicle, is specially qualified for the work he is intended to do, and he will often move your furniture, as his sign sets forth, "carefully and with dispatch." A thousand of these vans may be seen standing at the street corners, with their independent owners standing waiting for a job, and the worst of them is a great improvement on the ancient system. By some large firms in the City, however, furniture-moving is carried to a much higher pitch than this—raised almost to the dignity of a profession, in fact. Some large firms are engaged in this business almost exclusively: one of them employs thirty wagons, and from forty to sixty men; the wagons of the best patterns, and the men humane of disposition, and skilled by long experience in the moving of furniture. When an order is left with one of these firms a number of vans sufficient for its execution repairs to the house indicated at the appointed time, each van accompanied by two or three movers, with tarpaulins and canvas to cover the furniture in case of rain, and with heaps of thick cloths and carpet to prevent the pieces from jostling and scratching each other when loaded. The furniture is then taken piece by piece from the house just as it stands, brought gently down stairs and steps, and compactly stowed in the drays, with a liberal allowance of old carpet, &c., for padding.

As soon as all is packed in and covered the train starts for the new house, and the freight is there carefully and patiently unloaded and distributed through the rooms and stories, according to the direction of the proprietor. If anything is broken or damaged the owners of the wagons make themselves responsible, and promptly make the damage good. This of course renders them specially assidious to preserve everything from harm, and in the generality of cases houses full of furniture are moved literally without a scratch. This work is generally paid for by the load, so much for every load transported, but it is often the case that a householder, who wishes to avoid all trouble in the matter arranges with the movers to do the whole job. He may then dismiss anxiety from his mind, leave his furniture distributed throughout a house in Eighth-street, where he has been living, and come from his business at night to find it distributed over another house in Forty-fifth-street, or, perhaps, at Jersey City or on Staten Island, where he is going to spend the next year. Pianos, statuary, glass-ware, are all collected, and transported as if by magic, and distributed in a house miles away, and if anything is broken the mover makes himself legally responsible for the damage.

Three removes, it says in Poor Richard's Almanac, are as bad as a fire in the house." If FRANKLIN could revise his famous axioms in the light of the present day, he would be obliged, perforce, to leave that one out. Moving now is as easy as staying in the same place. It is as easy, that is to say, if one has the wherewithal to pay the bill. We do not get this gratis any more than other advantages of civilization. On the 1st of May we cannot get it without paying two prices—an illustration of the effect of demand on prices. There are two scales of prices for moving, and for each of them one gets no more and no less than the worth of his money. The gentlemen to be found on the street corners with their equipages will do moving in the City for $2 50 to $4 a load, but they do not make themselves responsible for injuries done, and sometimes knock property about in such a way that they could not pay for the resulting damage if they were sold up with all they owned. Hence persons with valuable furniture find it cheaper to employ some well-known firm at the usual price of $5 a load, guaranteed. On the 1st of May, as we have hinted, these prices are doubled invariably. New-York houses generally contain from three to six loads of furniture, some, of course, only two or two and a half loads, and some Fifth-avenue palaces seven or even ten loads. Where a house is taken by the job, the charge is a little more than it would be by the load, as the responsibility is a little greater.

On the 1st of May most of the moving is within the limits of the City, or from New-York to Brooklyn. In the City the price is about $10 per load. Furniture taken to Brooklyn on that day costs $15 per load, guaranteed. During the month of April a great many New-Yorkers are moving into the country—New-Jersey is the chief point of attraction this year—and large numbers of families have already moved and are moving thither. The ordinary rate for moving to Yorkville is $8 a load, damage guaranteed to Harlem, $10; to Jersey City and Hoboken, $8; to Elizabeth and Bayside, $18; to Newark, Orange, Montclair and Rahway, $18; to Scotch Plains, $25; to Scarsdale and Plainfield, $30, and to other places the charges are proportional to distance. Four horses are attached to the drays, and the load crosses the ferries and is driven rapidly to its destination without unpacking or derangement of any kind. While the moving into New-Jersey has been uncommonly brisk thus far this year, the exodus up the Hudson has been correspondingly small. During the last few years many have been in the habit of moving their furniture up to Yonkers and Tarrytown, to spend the Summer there and move back in the Fall. This year there has been, for some reason, very little movement of that kind.

Orders already begin to come to the furniture-movers for services on the 1st of May, and before the time comes they will all be overloaded with work. Then the business will be dull till Autumn, and only reach its highest activity a year hence, when "moving day" comes back once again.

Dissension in an Insurance Association.

About fifty members of the Independent Life Insurance and Sick Benefit Association met last evening at Pythagoras Hall, corner of Canal-street and Bowery, for the transaction of important business. Mr. J. P. SOLOMON presided. Mr. SOLOMON said that the object for which the meeting had been called was to present the resignations of the directors. He then read formal resignations from Judge Cardozo, Judge Kivlin and Judge Reed, and Messrs. Russell, President of the Gold Exchange Bank, John W. Orr, William Beurneth, Ralph Moss and John Baldwin. He explained that the reasons which prompted these directors to give in their resignations were that H. A. APPELIUS, the German Superintendent of the New-York Life Insurance Company, under whose auspices they had organized, instead of laboring for the advancement of the interests of the Association, had devoted all his time and energy toward villifying and abusing the Hildise Bund, and through it the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company. Mr. SOLOMON also tendered his resignation as President of the Association. Mr. SOLOMON put the question of acceptance of the resignations to the meeting, and a majority voted in favor of accepting them. He then left the chair, which was taken by Dr. LOWENTHAL, the Secretary, who subsequently tendered his resignation, and it was declared accepted.

MILITARY GOSSIP.

On the 18th inst., Gen. Dering, who commands the Twenty-first Brigade, proceeded to the armory of the Twenty-sixth Regiment, at Utica, for the purpose of disbanding the organization. The following officers were mustered out: Lieut.-Col. James F. Watson, Major John Peattie, Major Robert S. Dryer, Lieut. J. M. Oatley, Lieut. Ebenezer Thurston, Lieut. Alfred B. Thurston. The commanders of companies reported all ordnance stores, uniforms, &c., to Capt. R. B. Miller, Jr., designated by Gen. Dering to receive the same. The companies will for the present be under the immediate command of Gen. Dering, or some officer designated by him. These companies will be thoroughly drilled by some experienced person, designated for that purpose, and ere long we hope to see the regiment thoroughly reorganized, and more efficient than ever.

The repairs and improvements to the armory of the Zouave Cadets, or A Company, Tenth Regiment, at Albany, are nearly completed, and a grand reception is talked of, to which the lady friends of the members will be invited.

The following changes are announced in the Seventy-first Regiment: Lieut. Gilbert W. Knight, appointed on the Examining Board, vice Lieut. W. C. Dow, relieved at his own request. Commissioned—First Lieut. John E. Davenport. Discharged on expiration of service—Private Alfred Brooks, Company C. Expelled—Privates Bernard Sammon and John W. Mathews, of Company K. The following non-commissioned officers have passed examination and received warrants: Sergts. E. C. Imley, of E Company; H. S. Swift and A. W. Bolknap, of F Company; Corps. W. D. Faris and G. F. Benedict, of F Company; Henry C. Ripley and David Graham, of G Company; T. C. Smith, J. E. Rogers and C. R. Beekman, of B Company, and A. W. Holbrook, of D Company.

Capt. Brown, of the Boston City Guard, Co. D, First Battalion of Infantry, has written to the commander of the Montgomery Light Guard, demanding the championship flag for his company, on the ground that the Montgomery Light Guard has forfeited it by refusing to drill for it without stakes of $500 a side. The Montgomery Guard have reconsidered their vote regarding the $500 stake, with the championship, and have voted to drill with the City Guards on any honorable terms, either with or without stakes.

The Twenty-fifth Regiment of Colony have decided to go into New-York on the 6th of June, the excursion lasting two days. One of the Captains, it is understood, is to be summoned before a board of officers for examination as to his qualifications.

The Eighty-fourth Regiment will parade in full-dress uniform, at the State Arsenal, corner Seventh-avenue and Thirty-fifth-street, on Wednesday next. The line will be formed at 8 o'clock. The right and left wings assembled on Wednesday and Thursday evenings for drill and instruction. We notice Col. Conkling's name attached to the orders. Is he in command of his own regiment and the Second Brigade also?

The First Regiment will assemble at the State Arsenal, corner of Seventh-avenue and Thirty-fifth-street, in full uniform, on Friday evening next, for inspection and review.

The Army of the Potomac Association holds its next annual reunion in Boston, on the 12th of May next. The occasion will be one of interest to every soldier who belonged to the old Army of the Potomac. Among the public exercises will be an oration by Gov. Fancher, of Wisconsin, and a poe by Bret Harte. There will be a grand dinner at the Revere House, and a pleasant and inspiring gathering of comrades in the late war.

A new volunteer company is about being organized in Richmond, Va., and will be one of the most superb military organizations of the day. It will be called the "Pythian Rifles," and will be the only rifle company in Richmond.

An instruction class for recruits has been established in the Twenty-second Regiment. The class will comprise the existing company recruit squads, all recruits who may hereafter be admitted, and members who have, through inattendance, inattention, or otherwise, become deficient in drill and discipline—the latter to be selected from time to time by company commanders. The class will be placed under the control of the Adjutant, to instruct it in the school of the soldier and the principles of military discipline. He will be assisted by a commissioned officer, and two or more non-commissioned officers, to be hereafter designated. No member of the class will be permitted to parade or drill at any company or regimental drill or parade, except by special permission from head-quarters. As members of the class acquire the requisite proficiency in drill and discipline they will be assigned to their respective companies.

Company F, First Regiment, (Hawkins' Zouaves,) will give a calico sociable to-morrow evening, at their armory, No. 118 West Thirty-second-street, when military guests will appear in full uniform, instead of calico.

Major Hitchcock, of the "Erie Guard," or Ninth Regiment, has waited upon Gov. Claflin and obtained the usual official permission for the Regiment to enter the State under arms on the 17th of June. He also waited upon Mayor Kent, of Charlestown, and declined the tender of a collation by that city, as arrangements for their entertainment had already been made.

The Board of Officers of the Twenty-second Regiment have decided to impose a fine of $5 for a single absence from roll or parade, and $10 for each offense when such absences are frequent.

The military fever seems to have broken out in Virginia, for a Richmond paper states that an organization of young colored citizens has been recently formed in that city, to be known under the name of the Richmond Zouaves. Forty-one members were enrolled at the first meeting, and a permanent organization of the command was looked for at an early date. A majority of the members are old soldiers, having seen service in the Confederate and Union armies during the war, and the company is expected to be a "crack" one.

Col. Porter, commanding the Twenty-second Regiment, announces that orders for a street parade of the regiment, in full dress uniform, on or about May 17, will shortly be issued. Timely notice is thus given to prepare. The regiment will assemble at the armory, for battalion drill and inspection, as follows: On Friday next, in fatigue uniform, with knapsacks, (overcoats rolled in Spanish fashion,) and in full dress uniform. Assembly on each occasion at 7¾ P. M. The following members have been expelled for neglect of duty and non-payment of fines: A Company, Privates Henry T. Cassidy and Charles H. Allen; G Company, Privates Alvah Chapman, James D'Hervilly and George H. Ennis; E Company, Private John Brennan.

In the Eighth Regiment, all members recruited since April 1, 1870, are to appear at the armory in fatigue uniform, with knapsacks, on Friday evening, May 3, at 8 o'clock, and every Wednesday evening thereafter until further orders. Capt. William Green will take command of the recruit class. The First and Second Sergeants of the several companies will report to Capt. Green in turn. By this means an uniformity of drill will be secured, and the appearance of the command greatly improved.

The closing drill of Company E, Forty-seventh Regiment, will occur on Wednesday next, when spectators will be admitted by ticket. After the drill there will probably be some promenade music, judging from the hints we have received.

In the Eleventh Regiment it is announced that Lieut. C. J. Smith has been appointed adjutant; Capt. J. W. Scheu, assistant commissary, and R. E. Williams Assistant Surgeon. Lieut. Max Ebler is relieved from duty as Acting Adjutant. Orderly Sergt. J. Grabowsky, Company I, is appointed Commissary Sergeant, and Sergt. Brodehearst, Company E, Color-bearer.

A suburban journal says that the members of the militia will rejoice (?) to learn that the Governor has decided to order the National Guard of the State to perform six days of camp duty some time during the Summer. They will probably wait until the order is issued before manifesting any glee.

The Seventy-first Regiment Veteran Association met on Friday last and celebrated their third anniversary, and the tenth anniversary of the regiment's departure for Washington, in 1861, by a dinner at the Hotel Brunswick. Among the invited guests were Major-Gens. McDowell and Ambrose E. Burnside, and Col. Harry Allen, of Providence. These latter gentlemen were attached to the Rhode Island regiment that made the famous march from Annapolis to the Junction. The Committee of Arrangements, consisting of Ex-Col. Charles H. Smith, Col. Harry Rockafeller and Capt. James A. Baker, admirably performed their duties. Previous to the dinner the Veterans held their annual meeting and elected the following officers for the ensuing year: Colonel, Henry F. Martin; Lieutenant-Colonel, Chas. Henry Smith; Senior Major, William J. Coles; Junior Major, Oliver Libby; Adjutant, Harry Rockafeller; Engineer, E. A Quintard; Quartermaster, Geo. W. Rosevelt; Commissary, James T. Sanford.

The following changes are announced in the Eighth Regiment: Elections—Capt. Joseph P. Lyon, post of Company C, Staff Service, resigned; First Lieut. George T. Fielding, C Company, vice Davenport, promoted; Second Lieut. Edw. E. Mulligan, I Company, vice Johnston, dismissed; Capt. William H. Heathcote, A Company, vice Kennedy, resigned. Appointment—Henry W. Clark, B Company, to be Sergeant Standard-bearer, vice James Shaw, resigned. Expulsion—August Merckle, Company K, for conduct unbecoming a soldier and a gentleman. Due notice will be given of the time for the full-dress parade. The regular monthly meeting of the Board of Officers is postponed to the second Monday in May.

Respiration and Ventilation—Lecture by Prof. Silliman.

The last but one of the series of free lectures given under the auspices of the Cooper Union was delivered last evening by Prof. BENJAMIN SILLIMAN on the subject of "The Atmosphere with Reference to Respiration and Ventilation," in the presence of a large audience. The lecturer detailed the power of the great factors, oxygen and nitrogen, which are contained in the atmosphere, and their actual relations to each other. He analyzed carbonic acid—the product of the union of both ingredients—in its several phases, and explained the conditions and results which come from combustion, simplifying his remarks by practical scientific illustrations. "Passing to a consideration of animal life, he described the effects of carbonic acid, oxygen and nitrogen, in sustaining or diminishing the vital powers, and gave a complete exposition of the action of the lungs under the influence of these different substances. The experiments he had been attempting, he observed, were apparently striking, perhaps wonderful, but it was the glory of modern science that it was entirely free from all intricacies, and little investigation would be required to ascertain the accuracy of this assertion. He invited his audience to a closer examination of the questions on which he had but slightly touched, assuring them that the result would amply pay them for their time and labor. It was announced that the last lecture in the season would be delivered next Saturday evening, by Prof. DALY, on "Weights and Measures."

The Westchester Presbytery.

The Presbytery of Westchester, consisting of Presbyterian ministers and churches in Westchester and Putman Counties, and in of Connecticut, met at Stamford, in the latter State, on Wednesday last. Rev. WILSON PHRANER, the Moderator, presided. About seventy members were present, among whom was the venerable SAMUEL H. COX, D. D. Encouraging reports as to the state of religion were made from the several churches. Messrs. HOLBROOK, SAHLER, DUDLEY, and GREENLEAF were admitted as members, and Rev. Mr. MCDOUGALL dismissed to the Presbytery of Nassau. Two young men, Messrs. Woods and OWEN, were licensed to preach the Gospel. The Presbytery appointed as Commissioners to the General Assembly, Revs. D. S. GREGORY, A. R. MACOULVEY, J. N. FREEMAN, and Elders JOHN CLARK, S. G. HOWE, and E. WELLS.

Personal.

Ex-Gov. W. B. Lawrence, of Rhode Island; Prof. Pierce, of the United States Coast Survey, and Geo. M. Pullman, Esq., of Chicago, are at the Brevoort House. Prof. Agassis, of Cambridge; Dr. Gana Lobo, of Brazil; Senator Hoar, of Massachusetts; D. T. Casement, of Ohio, and Mr. and Mrs. W. J. Florence, are at the Fifth-avenue Hotel. Congressman Waddell, of North Carolina; Gen. M. C. Munger, of Indianapolis; Congressman W. H. Hooper, of Utah; Hon. B. F. Rice, of Arkansas; Hon. Jas. Tillinghast, of Albany, and S. Drullard, of Buffalo, are at the St. Nicholas Hotel; Senator W. M. Stewart, of Nevada, is at the Hoffman House. Hon. Marcus C. Hawley, of Bridgeport; Hon. H. Lesse, of Tennessee, and S. Bloomaker, Esq., of Kentucky, and Dr. R. B. Boutecur, of Troy, are at the Grand Central Hotel.

An Incident of the Norton Excursion—Attempt to Rob a Safe.

GEORGE QUINN, giving his residence at No. 218 West Forty-first-street, in this City, proceeded to Yonkers on Friday, as he alleges, with the intention of returning on board the steamer Sleepy Hollow, with Senator "Mike" NORTON and his friends. While waiting at Yonkers for the arrival of the boat he entered the office of Mr. GEORGE FRAZER, on Wells-avenue, and finding no one in attendance at the moment, endeavored to open the safe, in which operation he was soon detected by a relative of Mr. FRAZER'S. QUINN ran off, and was pursued and arrested by Officer WOODRUFF, and on being taken before Justice BAIRD, yesterday morning, that magistrate held him to answer for the offense.

The Disappearance of Gen. Lawrence Explained—A Defalcation of $47,500 Discovered.

An examination of the accounts of Gen. WILLIAM A. LAWRENCE, the missing Pension Agent, which has been in progress both here and at Washington since the appointment of his successor, Col. DOTY, shows that there is a deficit of about $50,000. The exact amount of the defalcation already discovered is $47,500, and it is thought that the total will not greatly exceed this sum. The Pension Office is now preparing a large number of pension checks, the payment of which was suspended pending the investigation of the accounts. The ultimate losers by the defalcation will be Gen. LAWRENCE'S bondsmen, who have announced their willingness to meet the liabilities of the absconding officer.

Sale of the Elevated Railroad Under an Execution.

Some time ago an execution was obtained from the Supreme Court against the West-side and Elevated Railroad Company for $214,408 73 by Messrs. DAVID DOWS, WM. L. WOODWARD, J. F. TRACY and WM. L. SCOTT, and placed in the hands of Sheriff BRENNAN, who yesterday proceeded to sell the railroad, with its franchises, rolling-stock, stations, engine-houses, fuel, &c. Deputy Sheriff GAMBLETON acted as auctioneer. There was only one bid for $5,000 by Mr. FRANCIS H. TOWE, and the road was therefore knocked down to that gentleman. It is understood that the working of the road, or rather the attempt to work it, will be proceeded with.

End of the Sand Boatmen's Strike.

The sand boatmen of this City, who have been on a strike for the past few days for higher wages, resumed work yesterday, at the old rate—$4 and board per trip. They wanted $5 each trip, claiming that this amount was a just one, as they never averaged more than two trips a week. They number about 500 strong, and serve as crews for the large one-mast boats that may be seen every day in the week, leaving or arriving at the pier foot of East Seventeenth-street, going for or returning laden with cargoes of sand. In various branches of industries sand is indispensable. The brown sand is necessary as a bed for the oblong blocks of pavement in the avenues and streets, and at present a large supply is wanted for First-avenue. The white sand is procured at Rockaway and Oyster Bay, while the brown sand is got at Staten Island and Cow Bay principally.

A Disreputable House Suppressed—Arrest of the Inmates.

For several months past Capt. ALLAIRE, of the Fourth Precinct, has received numerous complaints against the inmates of a low concert-saloon kept by JAMES RODGERS, alias "Admiral Jack," located in the basement of premises No. 83 Chatham-street, and known as the "Pleasure Hail." The place is one of the vilest of the underground dens with which Guard, has passed both Houses of the Legislature, and is probably another swindle, else it would not have passed.

Company H of the Thirteenth Regiment gave a concert and hop recently at the Brooklyn Arsenal for the benefit of one of the drummers who is in ill health and straitened circumstances. Of course the affair proved a success, for nearly the entire regiment was present, besides members from other organizations.

Among the innumerable bills passed by the Legislature was the one authorizing the formation of a military parade-ground. The Governor is expected to sign the bill, as it has been fathered by a junior member of the Ring.

On Friday next, a competitive drill will be had by Company K, Twenty-third Regiment, at the Brooklyn Arsenal, for a gold medal, to be awarded the best man. A social hop follows the military exercises.

The Fifty-fifth Regiment is tumbling to pieces since the German members paraded in the German Peace Festival, as the French members naturally feel annoyed that the old Garde Lafayette should be known as a German organization. Where is Col. Le Gal and his vivandieres?

The officers of the Fifth Regiment will meet, on Tuesday evening, at Irving Hall, at a banquet in celebration of the birthday of Jefferson, whose name the regiment bears.

The complimentary hop tendered to Drum-Major McKeever by the officers and members of the Eighth Regiment will take place at the armory to-morrow evening.

The Twelfth Regiment is ordered to assemble at the State Arsenal in full-dress uniform for battalion drill April 27. Assembly at 7¾ P. M. The field officers offer the following prizes for recruiting: First, a prize of $200 will be awarded to the company which, before the 1st of November next, shall be able to muster at least ten recruits, thoroughly uniformed and equipped, (full dress and fatigue,) in addition to those already enrolled, provided that it show a majority of recruits over any other competing company; second, the company showing at the time specified the next number of recruits, thoroughly uniformed and equipped, (at least seven however being required,) will receive a prize of $100. The following non-commissioned officers, having passed the Board of Examination, have been granted warrants, viz.: Sergts. David H. Ackerman and Bernard McGowan, Company G; Wm. D. Ivans, Company F, and Corp. Charles H. Scheibel, Company K.

The third anniversary of the "Old Guard" was held last night at their room, No. 907 Broadway. Major G. W. McLean presided, and the company sat down to a fine collation, after the discussion of which toasts were in order. The principal one, "The Day we Celebrate," was offered by the President, and suitably responded to by Mr. Henriches. Several other toasts followed, and were appropriately honored.

Destruction of Gen. Lawrence's Papers.

The place is one of the vilest of the underground dens with which the Fourth Ward is infested, and many strangers, especially seafaring men, have been decoyed into the place and robbed there. Capt. ALLAIRE, yesterday, obtained from Justice HOGAN a warrant for the arrest of the proprietor of the establishment and its inmates. Between 9 and 10 o'clock last night, Sergt. CHRISTIE, Roundsman BOLEMAN and a squad of patrolmen made a descent on the place and captured RODGERS, five of the female inmates, and six men who were found carousing in the vile place. The prisoners were locked up at the Oak-street Police Station, and will be arraigned at the Tombs today.

SCHOOL DISCIPLINE.

The Charges Against the Principal of School No. 31—Evidence of School Officers and Policemen.

The investigation in the case of A. T. GALLAGHER, Principal of Public School No. 31, who is charged with drunkenness, neglect of duty, &c., was resumed yesterday before the Committee on Teachers of the Board of Education. Police Officer SHERWOOD testified that he was detailed as truant officer to visit the Public Schools; was at Mr. GALLAGHER'S school on the 14th of February; saw Mr. GALLAGHER; he was not under the influence of liquor; never saw him intoxicated at any time.

Cross-examined—Usually visited the schools in the morning; sometimes remained half a minute, sometimes twenty minutes; have been visiting the schools about three years.

PATRICK MALONE, Janiter of School No. 31, and WILLIAM DOCHERTY, Ex-School Trustee, also testified that they had never seen Mr. GALLAGHER under the influence of liquor.

Police Officer GIBSON, of the Seventh Precinct, testified that a portion of his duties are to preserve order among the childen of School No. 31; frequently saw Mr. GALLAGHER; never saw him intoxicated; never heard the assistants complain of Mr. GALLAGHER.

Police Officer WILKINSON, of the Seventh Precinct, testified that he had been detailed to the evening schools for three or four terms; frequently saw Mr. GALLAGHER; never saw him intoxicated.

MARY E. CULLIVAN, testified that she had been a pupil in Mr. GALLAGHER'S school; was subsequently a teacher there for three years; never saw him intoxicated.

MARTIN COLLINS, an ex-teacher in the evening school, and PATRICK O'REILLY, First Assistant in Grammar-school No. 12, testified that Mr. GALLAGHER was always sober when they saw him.

RICHARD WALTERS, Ex-School Trustee of the Seventh Ward, testified that he had known Mr. GALLAGHER for several years; in 1864 Mr. SHIELS, a fellow Trustee, wanted to get Mr. WALTERS to vote to dismiss Mr. GALLAGHER; the matter came up in a regular meeting of the Board; witness would not give his vote; he would never vote to dismiss any man who has a family of seven children to take care of; at this time there was some talk about GALLAGHER'S indulgence in liquor; witness did not believe this talk; there always appeared to be a desire to get GALLAGHER out of the school; there was a candidate for the position; had known Mr. GALLAGHER since 1843; did not think the Trustees of the Seventh Ward knew much about the capacities of the teachers; never heard them examine the scholars in the higher classes.

The Committee then adjourned to Saturday next, at 2½ P. M., when it is understood the case will be closed.

LOCAL NEWS IN BRIEF.

NEW-YORK.

The motion on the petition of SETH ADAMS for a review of the proceedings in the Districts of Connecticut and Massachusetts, adjudicating the Boston, Hartford and Erie Railroad Company bankrupts, which was to come up yesterday before Judge WOODRUFF, in the United States Circuit Court, for argument, was adjourned, by consent, for three weeks. An application was made by Mr. DE COSTA for a modification of Judge BLATCHFORD'S order, so as to enable the creditors of the Company to proceed with the election of an assignee.

The members of the Ambulance Corps of this City will don their new uniforms to-morrow. Those for the surgeons include blue coat with brass buttons, and blue military cap ornamented with a gold cord and a wreath, the centre of which are the words "Ambulance Surgeons." The ambulance men will wear dark gray clothes, with black velvet coat collar and cuffs, a dark cap with a velvet band, and a gilt shield, on which is inscribed "Ambulance Bureau, No. —."

During last week voluntary petitions in bankruptcy were filed by Paul Falk and Charles O'Neill, and those to grant certificates to Isaac Stearn, Andrew G. Norwood, Edmund P. Rogers, Wm. H. Kern, and Ephraim H. Cuahman. The discharge of Charles K. Herrick was annulled.

It is announced that Mr. SMITH, who was arr
